

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. LONDON, JANUARY 12, 1850.

THERE is a curious case reported in the 6th volume of Meeson & Welsby, p. 358, (Cornfoot v. Fowke), which, if it be good law, is singularly bad justice, and shews how affectionate the law sometimes is to fraud, provided it be necessary, in order to support the fraud, to use arguments of the most intense cunning, and the most distant from those that ordinary and plain sense would suggest. The case to which we refer was in itself simple enough. The plaintiff, a house-owner, knew that his house was next door to a brothel; he employed, to let it, an agent, who did not know that fact. The agent, being applied to by the defendant, who wished to have the house, was asked "if there was any objection to it?" and the agent replied "that there was not;" whereupon the defendant signed an agreement to take the house. On discovering the fact of the adjacent nuisance, he declined to fulfil his agreement; and an action being brought, he pleaded that the plaintiff had procured him to enter into the agreement by means of fraud, covin, and misrepresentation of the plaintiff, and others in collusion with him. It was held that the plea could not be supported; as Parke, B., most ingeniously, and at the same time neatly, put it, "The simple facts that the plaintiff knew of the existence of the nuisance, and that the agent, who did not know of it, represented that it did not exist, are not enough to constitute a fraud. Each person is innocent, because the plaintiff makes no false representation; and the agent, though he makes one, does not know it to be false. And it seems to me an untenable proposition, that, if each be innocent, the act of either or both can be a fraud."

Lord Abinger (dissentient) put the case upon this more equitable ground—that the principal cannot take advantage of the false representation of his agent. "It appears to me," said the learned Chief Baron, "that nothing can be more plain than that the principal, though not bound by the representation of his agent, cannot take advantage of a contract made under the false representation of an agent, whether that agent was authorised by him or not to make such representation. Put the ordinary case of a servant employed to sell a horse, but expressly forbid to warrant him sound: is it contended that the buyer, induced by the warranty to give ten times the price which he would have given for an unsound horse, when he discovers the horse to be unsound, is not entitled to rescind the contract? This would be to say, that though the principal is not bound by the false representation of an agent, yet he is entitled to take advantage of that false representation, for the purpose of obtaining a contract beneficial to himself, which he could not have obtained without it."

What is the justice of such a case, or how it would be dealt with in equity if the proceeding had been a bill by the lessor for specific performance of the contract to take a lease, we have not much doubt. It is impossible not to see, that for a party to employ an agent to dispose of his property, concealing from him facts which, being known, will deteriorate its value; and knowing, as every man of ordinary knowledge of the world must be taken to know, that questions will or may be put to that agent involving the existence of the very facts concealed, is not merely putting it in the power of his agent to deceive—it is actually, by inference, instructing him to deceive: and it is impossible not to see that such conduct, if followed by insisting on the terms offered in ignorance of the truth so wilfully kept back, can only be attributed to a fraudulent purpose. A Court of equity, we take it to be clear, would not, under such circumstances, enforce performance of the contract. In Lucas v. James, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 912), where a question somewhat similar arose, but did not call for decision, Wigram, V. C., said, "The law, as stated by Sir Edward Sugden, and I believe correctly, respecting defects in subjects of contract, is this—that if the vendor, at the time of the contract, does not know of the existing defect in the estate, the Court will enforce the contract; otherwise, perhaps, if the defect be known to the vendor, and be one which a provident purchaser could not discover. I presume that the same law exists where the purchase is affected by a nuisance in the neighbourhood."

Now, this observation was made with reference to the case of a vendor simply not informing the purchaser—a much weaker case than that wherein the vendor so instructs, or rather so neglects to instruct, his agent, that he must be certain that the agent, if asked, will only return one answer, and that an untrue one. We do not find that the case of Cornfoot v. Fowke has been directly overruled at law; but a very modern case (Taylor v. Ashton, 11 M. & W. 401) seems, at least, very inconsistent with it. In that case it was laid down, that if one states to another a fact which is untrue, for a fraudulent purpose, with the intention of inducing him to do an act which he afterwards does to his prejudice, an action for deceit will lie; and it is not necessary to shew that the defendant knew the representation to be untrue. Now, applying that doctrine to Cornfoot v. Fowke, it is clear that the plaintiff, Cornfoot, by his agent, did make a representation which was untrue, and did make it for the purpose of inducing the defendant to do an act which he did to his prejudice: and though the agent himself did not know the untruth of his statement, his statement was that of his principal; and so, the want of knowledge of the untruth seems to have been immaterial.

If, however, we may, with all respect, use such a term in reference to a decided case, the substantial fallacy of the judicial argument in Cornfoot v. Fowke seems to have been the assumption, that because the plaintiff himself did not tell the falsehood, therefore he was innocent of the untruth told by his agent; overlooking this, that, by not informing his agent of the truth, he necessarily restricted him to the statement, if asked, of an untruth, and so was guilty of a fraud.

MEETINGS.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 25s. boards.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, JANUARY 19, 1850.

AN application was made on the 13th inst. to the Court of Queen's Bench, of, as it appears to us, a very unusual kind; we allude to the application for a writ of habeas corpus on the part of Mr. Dimes, the defendant in the cause, in Chancery, of The Grand Junction Canal Company v. Dimes.

We take the statement of the case as it is reported to have been made by the learned counsel for the applicant.

The affidavit on which the application was made stated, "that Mr. Dimes had brought an action of ejectment against the committee of the proprietors of the Grand Junction Canal, in which action he recovered judgment, and was put into possession of part of that canal under the judgment. A negotiation was then entered into between Mr. Dimes and a solicitor acting on the part of the company, and a certain price was unconditionally agreed to be paid by the company in respect of Mr. Dimes's interest in that portion of the canal. The company then refused to be bound by that agreement, and made another offer; and in 1838 they exhibited a bill in the High Court of Chancery, addressed to Lord Cottenham, (then Lord Chancellor), for an injunction to restrain Mr. Dimes from stopping, impeding, or obstructing the passage of boats, barges, and vessels on the canal, or in any way obstructing the navigation thereof. On this bill, and an ex parte application, an injunction was granted. On the 6th July, 1839, the injunction was continued by an order of the Vice-Chancellor. Upon this order of the Vice-Chancellor, Mr. Dimes, being in ignorance that the Lord Chancellor had any interest in the matter, appealed to the Lord Chancellor, as being contrary to law. The Lord Chancellor, however, confirmed the order of the Vice-Chancellor, with some slight variations in the terms of the injunction; and, in pursuance of the last order of the Lord Chancellor, an injunction was issued, by which Mr. Dimes and his servants were enjoined, under a penalty of 5000*l.*, from impeding or obstructing the passage of any boats, barges, or other vessels upon the Grand Junction Canal, or obstructing or damaging the canal or towing-path. At the time when the said order was made, Charles Christopher, Baron Cottenham, Lord Chancellor, was a proprietor and shareholder in the canal, and a member of the company, to the extent of holding seventeen shares as sole proprietor, and twenty-five shares as joint proprietor with another, each of the shares being of the value of 100*l.*, and at a premium of cent. per cent. The affidavit then stated, that, at the time when the bill was filed and the injunction was granted, the Lord Chancellor had considerable interest in restraining the applicant from doing any such acts as those forbidden; but that, up to the middle of the year 1848, Mr. Dimes was ignorant of the Lord Chancellor's interest. From that time, when, by the courtesy of the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Dimes was informed of his (the Lord Chancellor's) interest, he had endeavoured to find an impartial Court to determine his cause, but had failed in that endeavour. Under these circumstances, Mr. Dimes, believing the order of the Lord Chancellor to be void, but without intending any contempt, violated the order. The company then applied to the Vice-Chancellor, and the deponent was committed to the Queen's Prison by the order and under the warrant of the Lord High Chancellor, where he is now imprisoned under such warrant, and no other."

VOL. XIV.

not, of course, the mere application for a writ, if the facts were not known, but the application on the supposition that a Court of law can, or at least will, deal with the case substantially—that is, with the question whether Mr. Dimes ought to be liberated or not*. No doubt the writ is obtainable in reference to a commitment by any authority; but the real question that the Court of Queen's Bench will be asked to determine is, whether the decretal order made by the Lord Chancellor, restraining Mr. Dimes from doing the acts specified in the injunction, was valid and proper: for nothing can be clearer than that, if that order was a valid and proper order, the Lord Chancellor had authority to commit Mr. Dimes for a breach of it, which was a contempt of Court—the mode of enforcing an order of the Court, or of punishing contempt of its order, being, according to its long-settled practice, the committal of the party guilty of the contempt. The committal could, therefore, only be unlawful if there was no order, or no valid order, for an injunction. Now, has a Court of law jurisdiction, or, which comes to the same, has it ever exercised or will it exercise jurisdiction, to determine on the validity of a decree or decretal order made by the Court of Chancery?

We have always conceived, that, if there is any rule of jurisdiction that may be called well settled, it is, that no Court will directly question the validity of the order of another Court of superior or equal jurisdiction. To this rule the Court of Chancery strictly adheres, in the exercise even of its extraordinary jurisdiction of restraining proceedings in other courts by injunction, in doing which, it never assumes to question the legal validity of any order of another Court, but only to question the equitable right of a party to avail himself of it. But in the case brought, or possibly to be brought, before the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court will not be asked whether, admitting the validity of the Chancellor's injunction, the Grand Junction Canal Company can be in any manner prevented by a Court of law from using it, but it will be asked to discharge Mr. Dimes out of custody, on the ground that his commitment by the Chancellor was unlawful; the lawfulness, or, in other words, the validity of the injunction, must therefore be the direct subject of inquiry. We apprehend a Court of law has no jurisdiction to make such an inquiry; but, if it had the jurisdiction, technically speaking, has it the means of prosecuting the inquiry? The principles on which injunctions are granted are purely equitable; they are, we conceive, judicially known only to the equity judges; indeed, the Courts of law have specifically repudiated the possession of the jurisdiction to grant them; and how can they have judicial knowledge of a law which they say they have no jurisdiction to carry into effect?

To ascertain whether the Chancellor's injunction was valid, the Court of Queen's Bench would require to hear the motion for it re-argued; in other words, to rehear it, by way of appeal from the Chancellor. But then it is said, that the injunction was irregular, or rather a nullity, not by reason of anything irregular on the face of it, or in the proceedings themselves, but because they were coram non iudice; because the Chancellor was rendered incapable by interest of hearing the motion; and because the bill was not regularly preferred, as it ought to have been, not to the Chancellor, but to the Queen. But these questions are also questions of which, we apprehend, in a Chancery suit, the Chancellor, and the appellate Court to which there is regularly an appeal from the Chancellor, viz. the House of Lords, are the sole judges; for whatever may be the rule in courts of law as to the degree of incapacity conferred on a judge by interest, or as to the authority to which a complaint, which would lie to that judge if not interested, ought to be made if he is interested, it does not follow that the same rule prevails in courts of equity; and the judges of the common law, in deciding these questions, would be, in effect, deciding what are the procedure and practice of Courts of equity—a subject on which, we conceive, they can have judicially no knowledge.

* Since these observations were written and printed, the Court of Queen's Bench has heard argument on the return to the writ, which was so framed as not to bring the real question before the Court. Possibly an attempt may yet be made to do so; and the foregoing observations are therefore still applicable.

We await, with some curiosity, the sequel of the application in question, which, we confess, appears to us simply an attempt to appeal from the Lord Chancellor to the Court of Queen's Bench, instead of appealing to the regular Court of appeal from the Chancery, which is the House of Lords.

GRAY'S-INN, HILARY TERM, 1850.—A notice has been issued (with the sanction of the Benchers of Gray's-inn) to the effect, that there will be a Voluntary Examination for Honours in the Laws of Real Property, in the Hall of that Society, in Trinity Term, namely, on Thursday and Friday, the 23rd and 24th days of May next, commencing at ten o'clock A.M. on each day. All Students for the Bar, Members of any Inn of Court, will be qualified to attend and stand on the occasion. The names of the successful candidates alone will appear in the published class list, so that those who do not go in for Honours, or who do not succeed, will not suffer any prejudice. The gentleman who attains the first place in the list (being of merit not inadequate, in the opinion of the examiners, to entitle him to that distinction) will receive the Lecturer's Prize, consisting of a set of the Reports of Vesey, jun. (20 vols.)

SOLICITORS' and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, Chancery-lane, London.

DIRECTORS.

Church, John Thomas, Esq.	Mourilyan, Joseph Noakes, Esq.
Cox, Edward William, Esq.	Murray, William, Esq.
Donne, Samuel Edward, Esq.	Symons, Jelling Cookson, Esq.
Fonblanque, John S. M., Esq.	Torr, John Smale, Esq.
Jones, William, Esq.	Withall, William, Esq.
Maynard, Jonas Alleyne, Esq.	Wordsworth, Charles, Esq.
Morris, John Michael, Esq.

This Society presents the following advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits periodically, (without deduction for interest on capital or guarantee fund), either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.
Fifth.—Policies INDISPURABLE, except in case of fraud.

Sixth.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Seventh.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

LONDON, JANUARY 26, 1850.

WHETHER a party in a cause may discredit his own witness is a question which is not yet clearly determined. It is certain that general evidence of bad character is not admissible for such a purpose. After producing a witness, the party who calls him may not shew him to be of such a general bad character as would render him unworthy of credit. "This would enable him to destroy the witness if he spoke against him, and to make him a good witness if he spoke for him, with the means in his hand of destroying his credit if he spoke against him." (Bull. N. P. 297).

But if a witness state facts adverse to the interest of the party calling him, that party may call another witness to disprove those facts, as such facts are evidence in the cause; and the discredit of the witness in such case is not a direct, but only the incidental or collateral effect produced by the opposing testimony. (Bull. N. P. 297; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 556; Richardson v. Allan, 2 Stark. 334; Bradley v. Ricardo, 8 Bing. 59; Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 Bl. R. 365; Pike v. Badmering, 2 Str. 1096 a; Friedlander v. The London Assurance Company, 4 B. & Ad. 193).

The result of this contradiction, as to matters of fact, is to leave the whole evidence to the jury, who may adopt such part as appears to them worthy of credit.

The conflict of judicial opinion, however, has arisen with regard to the power of a party to contradict his own witness, who has given testimony against him, by shewing that the witness has formerly made a statement inconsistent with that which he now offers to the jury.

On the trial of Warren Hastings, the opinion of the judges was taken by the House of Lords on this point, and it was in these terms:—"That where a witness, produced and examined in a criminal proceeding by a prosecutor, disclaims all knowledge of any matter so interrogated, it is not competent for such prosecutor to pursue such examination, by proposing a question containing the particulars of an answer supposed to have been made by such witness before a committee of the House of Commons, or in any other place, and by demanding of him whether the particulars so suggested were not the answers he had so made." (Journ. Dom. Proc., 10th April, 1788).

This decision, as Mr. Phillips observes, goes too far: there is express authority for a modification of the rule, at least to a certain extent, namely, to allow a party to propose such a question to the witness, and to receive his answer, although, if the answer is unfavourable, it may be held to be conclusive. (2 Ph. Ev. 452).

There are cases which appear to shew that depositions and answers in Chancery may be used by a party to contradict his own witness; but these may be supported upon the ground, that statements made upon oath in a judicial proceeding are of so solemn a nature, that they may fairly be adduced to counterbalance subsequent testimony by the same witness, upon his oath, in a subsequent judicial proceeding. (See Rez v. Olroyd, Russ. & R. C. C. 88; Ewer v. Ambrose, 3 B. & Cr. 749). They are certainly very different from the contradiction of a witness by another witness, called by the same party to depose to conversations and are not open to the same objections on the ground of collusion. Evidence, however, has been received of such statements. (Bernasconi v. Fairbrother, cited in Wright v. Beckett, 1 Man. & R. 414; Dunn v. Aylett, 2 Man. & R. 122). In Wright v. Beckett the judges differed in opinion on this subject; and on two other occasions

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TREVITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of nisi prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported cases; the Statutes to the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 2, 1850.

MR. HARE, already advantageously known to the Profession by his learned treatise on "Discovery," and by his Equity Reports, than which, since Mr. Swanton's, no better have been seen, has adventured into the field of legal pamphleteering, in support of reform in the judicial procedure of the Court of Chancery*. The peculiarity of Mr. Hare's scheme of reform is the proposition to commence all proceedings in Chancery in the office of the Master, wherever the cause of suit may be, and for that purpose to make the judges of the county courts, or the country commissioners in bankruptcy, or both, Masters in Chancery. But we will let Mr. Hare state his proposition in his own words.

"There is," he says, "I believe, nothing new in the proposal to commence a suit in equity by a step to be taken in the Master's office, and thereby avoid the expense and delay of the preliminary pleadings now in use. It has, I think, been proposed to adopt this course in administration suits. My present suggestion is to extend this mode of proceeding to all kinds of suits, and enable the suit to be carried on, up to a certain stage, by the parties or their solicitors, in any part of the country in which they may reside, or the cause of suit may arise. There was not, until a recent period, any functionaries before whom such proceedings could take place, other than the present Masters; but now that the establishment of local jurisdiction, throughout the kingdom, has placed in every district a judge qualified by professional education and experience for the examination of the questions and details proposed to be committed to him, the state is in possession of machinery for judicial purposes which may, and doubtless will, be most advantageously applied and extended for the general administration of justice.

"It is essential to the constitution of a perfect system of procedure for determining questions of property—First, that a party have every reasonable means and facility for bringing before the Court the nature and grounds of his claim to the subject in dispute, or the nature and grounds of his defence to the claim of the other party.

"Secondly, that all the parties interested are informed of and appear in the proceeding, or have every reasonable opportunity of appearing or taking a part in the proceeding.

"Thirdly, that every party have the means of proving, by testimony or otherwise, so far as the power of the law can give it, the facts upon which the dispute or question arises; and,

Fourthly and lastly, that there exist a competent tribunal to determine the result in law, from the evidence adduced by the parties, and to conclude the question in dispute by its judgment or decree.

"It has appeared to me, that all these conditions may be realised by making the judges of the county courts, and perhaps the commissioners of the bankruptcy court, titularly Masters in Chancery for certain specified districts, and extending their powers, so far as shall be necessary, for the purposes contemplated; and at the same time enabling the Court of Chancery to make decrees or orders upon the report, or upon the motion of the party or parties founded on the report of a local Master, in the same manner, and with the some binding effect, as such decrees and orders are now made upon the hearing of a cause brought before the Court in the ordinary way. The process of the county courts may be made to insure (as I have no doubt that process now does in the matters within its scope) the three first of the above conditions; and I do not think it will be doubted that the Court of Chancery, as it is now constituted, and before which it is proposed that every disputed matter should ultimately come, is perfectly competent to satisfy the fourth and last condition.

"I propose to adopt the mode of plaint and summons now in use in the county courts, for the purpose of commencing a suit. The form of proceeding suggested will be most succinctly shewn by setting out an outline of the supposed report of a local Master, in an administration suit by a residuary legatee.

"IN CHANCERY.

"Between A. and B.,.....Plaintiffs, and

"To the Right Honourable the LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR.

"This is to certify to your Lordship, that the plaintiffs, A. and B., claiming to be two of the residuary legatees named in the last will of G., late of —, deceased, entered their plaint on the 10th day of January, 1850, and prayed the summons of this Court, that the defendant C., as executor of the said will, might shew cause, if he could, why he should not render to the said plaintiffs an account of the personal estate of the said G., and pay to each of the said plaintiffs his share of the residue thereof; whereupon the said summons issued, requiring the said defendant C. to appear before me at my court at —, on the 17th day of January, 1850, and answer thereunto; and the said defendant C. appeared at the said time and place, and said that he was the executor of the last will of the said G., as alleged, and that he had possessed divers monies and effects of the personal estate of the said G., and had paid divers debts and charges thereon; and that the said plaintiffs were two of the legatees named in the said will, and that W. and X. were named in the same will, and claimed to be also legatees of the residue or part of the residue of the estate of the said testator, G.; and the said C. then produced the probate copy of the will of the said testator, G., a copy whereof I have set forth in the schedule to this my report. And the said C. alleged that doubts had arisen on the true intent and meaning of the said will, and that he, the said C., ought to be held harmless and indemnified in the administration of the said estate; and the said C. craved time, until the 17th day of March then next, to set forth a full account of the said estate, and which time I allowed. And I directed the said defendant C., in the meantime, to cause advertisements to be published, &c. [advertisements for creditors, &c.]; and I directed that the summons of this Court should be forthwith issued to the said W. and X., requiring them to appear on the said 17th day of March, and shew cause, if they could, why the said A. and B. should not have the relief prayed by their said plaint. And on the said 17th day of March the said C. appeared accordingly, and produced his account of the said testator's personal estate, and of the application of such parts thereof as had been applied; and the said account is appended to this my report. And it appeared that the said advertisements had been duly issued, and that no person had claimed to be a creditor of the said testator's estate. And the said W. and X. also appeared, and shewed no cause against such relief as aforesaid, but claimed certain interests in the said personal estate; and I have taxed the costs of the said A. and B. at £—, and the costs of the said C. at £—, and the costs of the said W. at £—, and the costs of the said X. at £—. All which I humbly submit.

(Signed)

"W. W.,

Master in Ordinary for the District No. —."

Mr. Hare adds other examples to illustrate his proposed plan, for which we refer our readers to his pamphlet, the extraction of one example sufficing for our present purpose.

To the proposition of commencing all suits, of the class termed "administratory," in the Master's office, we have no objection to make; nor do we see any particular objection to the commencing of such suits in any part of the country that may be most convenient to the parties, wherever there is to be found a county court or a commissioner in bankruptcy. For, in truth, such suits are, as to nine-tenths of all the business really requisite to be done in them, mere suits for account, requiring scarcely any formality of pleading or procedure in their beginning, in their middle, or in their end. In them occasionally arise questions of law, of more or less difficulty; and if, upon such questions, the decision of the inferior court were not satisfactory to either party, it might easily be carried to the superior court by a case stated, as is the practice in appealing from Revising Barristers; or by an appeal motion, according to the practice adopted under the Winding-up Acts; or in half-a-dozen other modes. The accounts in such suits can be as well taken in the country as in London; and it is entirely a question of convenience and expense, which is most advantageous to the suitors.

When, however, the principal subject-matter of a suit is not account, but ascertainment of legal or equitable rights—when, in fact, the principal matter is not that which is now done in the Master's office, but that which is done in court—the vice of the present system is not in commencing the proceeding in court, but in the mode of commencing and conducting it. What Mr. Hare proposes to do in reference to this point, he does not in his pamphlet tell us. He says, it is true, that he proposes to adopt the mode of plaint and summons now in use in the county courts, for the purpose of commencing a suit; but he does not inform us how or on what principle the plaint is to be framed; how the defence is to be made; nor how the evidence is to be taken; nor, in fact, does he give even an outline of the form of pleading and procedure. For ourselves, we do not see the advantage of commencing suits, of the class here spoken of, in the Master's office. Some strictness and precision in the forms of pleading will be always necessary in them; and if the simplification and brevity which are desirable, and we believe attainable, be substituted for the present prolix and complicated forms, the great evil of Chancery procedure would be removed: and there seems then no good reason for instituting in the Master's office proceedings, the nature of which is to require, as soon as the suit is properly constituted and the proofs taken, adjudication upon the contested rights of the parties.

We are glad, however, to see the subject of reform in Chancery proceedings taken up in every variety of form, as, out of the consideration of the suggestions made by various minds, may arise a thorough sifting of the existing defects, and an ultimate improvement of the procedure of Courts of equity. Of the principles of equity, no one, at least, no informed person, complains. The only and just complaint is, that those principles are worked by a machinery so ponderous, as to make it quite inadequate for the wants of the community.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

HILARY TERM.—13 VICTORIA.—Jan. 29, 1850.

This Court will, on Monday the 11th day of February next, and on every succeeding day, until and inclusive of Saturday the 16th day of February next, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business now pending in the Paper of New Trials, and in the Special Paper, and in giving judgment in certain of the matters that will then be standing over for the consideration of the Court. And this Court will, on Monday the 25th day of February next, hold a sitting, and will on such last-mentioned day proceed to give judgment in certain of the matters that will then be standing over for the consideration of the Court.

By GEORGE SPENCE, Esq., Q.C.

* Vol. 1 may be had, price 11. 11s. 6d. boards.

"... A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced.

"For such a work, so valuable and so unique, the Profession would not begrudge the cost of one or two volumes, more or less. The pockets of the English lawyers are, we regret to say, not likely to be often appealed to by claims of equal merit."—Law Times, Oct. 6, 1849.

"... The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668, Oct. 27, 1849.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 9, 1850.

It is not an unusual proceeding for the directors of companies to enforce the payment of calls both by action and by forfeiture of the shares of a defaulting shareholder. The propriety of this course, sometimes adopted under the terms of the deed of settlement, and sometimes under the stat. 8 Vict. c. 16, has been questioned in two recent cases.

In Giles v. Hutt (3 Exch. 18; 5 Dowl. & L. 387) the deed of settlement of a joint-stock company authorised the directors, at any time after the expiration of one month from the giving of notice, to apportion a sum by way of interest on the money due, and to limit a day for the payment thereof, and to declare, in default of payment thereof on or before such day so limited, that the shares in respect of which such default should be made should thenceforth be absolutely forfeited, or that it should be in the discretion of the board at once to declare such shares forfeited; provided always, that it should be lawful for the board, if they should think fit, to enforce the payment of the amount due in respect of any call, &c., instead of declaring the same to be forfeited.

The power given to the directors under this deed was held to be alternative only, and the Court decided that the commencement of an action, and obtaining judgment thereon, against a shareholder, for the recovery of a call due in respect of his shares, amounted to an election by the directors to adopt that mode of proceeding, so as to render null and void a subsequent resolution declaring such shares to be forfeited. The judgment of the Court, in this case, proceeded upon the construction of the deed of settlement. The subsequent decision in The Great Northern Railway Company v. Kennedy (13 Jur., part 1, p. 1008) has interpreted the stat. 8 Vict. c. 16, so far as it bears on this subject, and has declared, that, under its clauses, (sects. 25, 29, 31, 34, and 35), the remedies of action and forfeiture are cumulative, and not alternative.

VOL. XIV.

In that case, a plea to an action for calls, that the shares had been declared forfeited, was held bad on demurrer. The substance of the sections to which we have referred may be stated as follows:—The company may sue a defaulting shareholder, (sect. 25); the directors may, at any time after the expiration of two months from the day appointed for payment, declare the shares forfeited, and “that whether the company have sued for the amount of such call or not,” (sect. 29); the said declaration of forfeiture shall not take effect, so as to authorise the sale or other disposition of such shares, until it has been confirmed at a general meeting, to be held after the expiration of two months at least from the day on which notice of intention to make such declaration shall have been given, and the company may confirm such forfeiture, and direct such shares to be sold, or otherwise disposed of, (sect. 31); but only so far as shall be sufficient, as nearly as can be ascertained, to pay the arrears then due, together with interest and expenses; and if the money produced by the sale be more than sufficient for these purposes, the surplus shall, on demand, be paid to the defaulter, (sect. 34); and if he pay the amount due before the sale of his shares, they shall revert to him as if the calls had been duly paid, (sect. 35).

It will be at once seen, that the language of these sections is very different from that of the deed of settlement before set forth; and the distinction is clearly stated in the judgment of Parke, B.:—“This case differs from Giles v. Hutt, for there the deed of settlement, in express terms, gave to the company the alternative remedy, either of suing or of declaring the shares to be forfeited; and the Court held, that, having obtained judgment against the defendant, they had elected that remedy, and could not declare a forfeiture. Whether, if they had brought the action only, that would have been an election, was not decided, but I think that it would. But, looking at the 8 Vict. c. 16, it is clear that the terms used do not give the forfeiture as an alternative remedy, but as a further security for the calls until payment. The shares are in the nature of a pledge or mortgage, and until the claim is satisfied the action may be maintained. There would still be a right to the costs if payment was after action brought." These last words refer to an argument used for the company, and apparently assented to by the Court, that the proceeds of the sale could not be applied to the costs of the action under the 34th section; and therefore, if the shares were declared forfeited after the commencement of the action, as they were in this case, and then even sold for a sum sufficient to cover all expenses, the company would be entitled to continue their action for the costs. If the shares be sold before the commencement of the action, it seems that the defendant should avail himself of this fact, by pleading it as an accord and satisfaction to so much of the cause of action as the amount realised may cover.

In the course of the argument in the latter case, the Court asked whether the plea was not an argumentative traverse of the defendant being the holder of the shares; but they were referred to the case of The Belfast and County Down Railway Company v. Strange, (1 Exch. 729), as shewing that the allegation to that effect in the declaration means that the defendant was holder at the time when the call was made. The other cases upon this subject have been decided with reference to the particular words used in the special acts of railway companies; upon application to plead several matters to actions for calls. In The London and Brighton Railway Company v. Fairclough (6 Bing. N. C. 270) the Court disallowed a plea that the defendant had forfeited his shares and ceased to be a proprietor after the making of the calls, and before the commencement of the action, as being contrary to the spirit and meaning of the company's act. In The Eastern Counties Railway Company v. Cooke (2 Railw. Cas. 250) such a plea was allowed. (See also The Edinburgh, Leith, and Newhaven Railway Company v. Hebblewhite, 1d. 237; and The South-eastern Railway Company v. Hebblewhite, 12 Ad. & El. 407).

VALIDITY OF A BILL OF SALE OF GOODS IN CASE OF INSOLVENCY.

The Insolvent Debtors Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, contains a clause (sect. 57) corresponding with the reputed ownership clause in the Bankrupt Act, by which it is enacted, that if the prisoner shall, at the time of the commencement of his imprisonment, by the consent of the true owner, have in his possession, order, or disposition any goods or chattels whereof such prisoner was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon himself the sale, alteration, or disposition as owner, the same shall be deemed to be the property of such prisoner, so as to vest in his assignees for the benefit of his creditors.

The effect of that clause, and the corresponding clause in the Bankrupt Act, is to render it necessary for a mortgagee of goods and chattels, in order to secure himself in the event of the insolvency or bankruptcy of his debtor, to take possession of the goods, either actually or constructively, so as to withdraw them from the reputed ownership of the debtor. For this purpose, a declaration, that it shall be lawful for the debtor to retain possession until after demand of payment and default, will be of no avail, although it is sufficient to protect the goods from an execution creditor.

But, even after he has taken possession of the goods, the mortgagee is still liable to have his security defeated by the insolvency of his debtor, if the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Parrott v. Congress, (13 Jur. 398), can be supported. By sect. 61 of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, it is enacted, that where any prisoner, whose estate shall have vested in the provisional assignee under the act, shall have executed any warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or shall have given any cognovit actionem on bill of sale, whether for a valuable consideration or otherwise, no person shall, after the commencement of the imprisonment of such prisoner, avail himself of any execution upon any judgment to be obtained upon such warrant of attorney, or cognovit actionem, or of such bill of sale, either by seizure and sale of the property of such prisoner, or by sale of such property theretofore seized, or any part thereof.

The "Act to amend the Law of Insolvency, Bankruptcy, and Execution," 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, contains provisions applicable to the case of a petitioner for protection under the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 118. The reputed ownership provisions are embodied in the 17th section, and by sect. 19 it is enacted, "that if the petitioner shall, before or after the filing of his petition, in contemplation of his becoming insolvent, or being in insolvent circumstances, voluntarily convey, assign, transfer, or charge, deliver, or make over any estate, real or personal, security for money, bond, bill, note, money, goods, or effects whatsoever, to or in trust for any creditor or creditors, or person liable as surety for the petitioner, every such conveyance, &c. shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against the assignee or assignees in insolvency; provided, that no such conveyance, &c. shall be so deemed fraudulent and void if made at any time prior to three months before the filing of the petition, and not with the view of petitioning." This clause corresponds with the 59th section of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and is here mentioned because it was relied on in Parrott v. Congress. The 21st section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, corresponds with the 61st section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, except that, in the more recent act, the expressions relating to seizure and sale apply exclusively to warrants of attorney and cognovits, the provision as to bills of sale being merely that they shall not be available (without stating how) after the petition. Even in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 61, the words "seizure and sale" seem to refer only to seizure and sale of the prisoner's general property under an execution. The clause in the former Insolvent Debtors Acts (7 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 34, &c.) was confined to executions, the words "bill of sale" having been first introduced in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

In Parrott v. Congreve the defendant, Congreve, claimed under a mortgage, dated the 1st January, 1841, by which Small assigned to Congreve all his goods and chattels in and about his dwelling-house and premises at H., specified in an inventory, subject to redemption on payment by Small to Congreve of the sum of 600*l.* at the expiration of twenty years from the date of the deed, or at such earlier time as Congreve, his executors, administrators, or assigns, should appoint, by giving three months' notice in writing, and of interest in the meantime. Congreve was authorised to take possession after default, and to sell. It is not stated that there was an express proviso, that in the meantime Small should retain possession of the goods; but, if there was not, no question was raised on the omission. On the 1st July, 1843, a further charge of 400*l.* was given by Small to Congreve. On the 26th January, 1848, Small executed an assignment to Congreve of all his goods and chattels in and about his dwelling-house, and all farming-stock and crops in and about his farm at H., as a further security for a further sum of 600*l.* then advanced by Congreve, and 400*l.* for which he was liable as surety, with a power of sale. In June, 1848, Congreve served a notice on Small, demanding payment on the 29th September following. On the 21st February, 1849, Congreve seized the goods, 1000*l.* being due on the two first securities, and 1297*l.* on the last. On the 8th March, 1849, Small filed his petition for protection, under the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, of which notice was served on Congreve, who, however, was proceeding to sell the goods, when the official assignee of Small obtained an ex parte injunction to restrain him, which injunction the Vice-Chancellor now continued to the hearing. The plaintiff contended, that, even if the goods in execution at the date of the assignment could be sold by the defendant, he could not claim the farming-stock, which was not in existence when the assignment was made; but the injunction was continued as to all the goods. His Honor said, "Sect. 19 makes void every conveyance and dealing, with this provision—that no conveyance shall be deemed void if made within three months before filing the petition. Now, I apprehend, that, as far as the indenture is at all concerned, it is saved by sect. 19, for that was made more than three months before the filing of the petition; but, so far as the delivery is of importance, I think it is within the meaning of sect. 19, for the delivery was not made till February, and the petition was filed in March. Then, sect. 19 having declared that certain dealings shall be deemed fraudulent and void, comes sect. 21, that in all cases where any petitioner for protection from process, whose estate shall have been vested in any assignee, shall have executed any warrant of attorney to confess judgment, or shall have given a cognovit or bill of sale, no person shall avail himself of it by seizure or sale. Then what does it do? It does not deal with the validity of the contract or the bill of sale; but, leaving the validity of the bill of sale unaffected, declares, that where a petition has been presented, and by the act the estate and effects have been vested, no person shall avail himself of the bill of sale, but the party shall come in under the insolvency. It appears to me, therefore, that the bill of sale is not touched, and remains as it was; and if anything is to be hoped to be derived by the delivery, why the delivery is void; but if the bill of sale is good, the party cannot avail himself of it now, and if he seeks the benefit of it, it must be under the insolvency."

His Honor seems to have read the 21st section as if the words "by seizure and sale, or by sale," had reference to a bill of sale; but that is not so. The words are, "no person shall avail himself of any execution issued or to be issued &c., either by seizure and sale of the property of such petitioner, or any part thereof, or by sale of such property theretofore seized, or any part thereof, or avail himself of such bill of sale." The clause, it will be observed, is perfectly general; it is not confined to voluntary or fraudulent securities, or even to securities at all, but applies to every warrant of attorney, cognovit, and bill of sale whatever, and whenever given; and if the Vice-Chancellor's construction is correct, a bonâ fide assignment of goods by bill of sale, intended for an absolute sale, paid for and completed by actual delivery of the goods, may be defeated five or even twenty years afterwards by the vendor's insolvency. That, of course, cannot be the meaning of the enactment, nor could it have been intended to apply even to every bill of sale by way of security, for a mortgagee of goods and chattels, followed by actual delivery, has as just a claim to protection as a mortgagee of real estate, and so capricious an intention as that of defeating the one and leaving the other in full force cannot be imputed to the Legislature. The intention was merely to prevent the holder of the bill of sale from availing himself of that instrument alone. He is not to avail himself of the bill of sale after the petition is filed; that is, he shall not take possession after that time. But if, before the petition is filed, he takes possession, he no longer relies on the bill of sale, but on his title by possession, obtained, not, as the Vice-Chancellor seems to have thought, under a voluntary delivery within the 19th section, but by virtue and in exercise of a prior authority granted for valuable consideration. It is true that the provision as to bills of sale, so construed, is superfluous, for the same effect is produced by the reputed ownership clause; but it is better to limit the provision to a reasonable meaning, though by so doing it is made superfluous, than to adopt an interpretation involving the absurd consequences which we have pointed out. There is nothing in the language of the clause to confine it to mortgages; and even if, without any warrant from its terms, it were so construed, it would still be inconsistent, for it would defeat a mortgage of goods by bill of sale, completed by seizure under the bill of sale, and would leave unaffected a mortgage of goods by delivery only, accompanied with a written defeasance, for such a delivery, not being voluntary, would not be within the 19th section.

The language of the 61st section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is slightly different, as we have seen; and in a case within that act, where the bill of sale contained no power of sale, but was to be absolute after default, it was at law held that the mortgagee, taking possession before the imprisonment, was entitled to retain possession against the assignee suing in trover. (Hunt v. Robins, 3 Q. B. 300). The Court seemed to think that the enactment might have applied to a seizure for the purpose of sale under a power of sale. It will, therefore, be prudent in all mortgages of goods not to confine the mortgagee to the remedy by sale, but to leave him at liberty to rest on his title under the assignment.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE, A. D. 1720.—Incorporated by Charter of his Majesty George the First.—CHIEF OFFICE, in the ROYAL EXCHANGE. Branch Office, No. 29, Pall Mall.

LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES may be effected on the most advantageous terms with this Corporation, which has transacted business in all departments during a period exceeding a Century and a Quarter, and affords unquestionable Security by its Capital Stock.

The reversionary BONUS declared on British Life Policies effected on the system of participation in profits has amounted on an average to rather more than 21. per Cent. per Annum on the sum assured, or 461. per Cent. on the amount of Premium paid.

Equivalent reductions have been made in the Annual Premiums payable by those of the Assured who desired that their share of profit should be so applied.

The position and character so long maintained by the Corporation afford a sufficient guarantee that this Bonus has been declared out of Surplus actually realised, and not by anticipating future Profits.

Policies are granted for sums payable to the Assured on their attaining any specified age, or to their representatives in case of their premature death.

Persons assured with this chartered Corporation are exempt from the liabilities of Partnership.

The practice of promptly deciding upon proposals, of registering and acknowledging notices of assignments, and giving information as to prior notices, is important to Members of the Legal Profession: and the granting Assurances to the extent of 10,000l. on a Life saves trouble to Clients as well as Solicitors, by obviating the necessity of appearance and examination at numerous offices.

The usual Commission is allowed to Solicitors, on introduction of Life Assurances, and is annually reserved for the same parties, notwithstanding the possible payment of subsequent Premiums through different Members of the Profession.

ALEX. GREEN, Secretary.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 16, 1850.

THE rule lately laid down by the Lord Chancellor in Craddock v. Piper, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 97), with reference to the costs to be allowed to a trustee acting as solicitor, requires careful consideration, with a view to its application, in order to avoid falling into the error of supposing it more extensive than it really is. The rule laid down in the case referred to is, that a trustee, being a solicitor, and acting as such in business which is the proper business of the trustee, is only entitled to his costs out of pocket; but that if he acts as a solicitor for other parties, being either his co-trustees, or his cestuis que trustent, in that which is their business as cestuis que trustent, or the joint business of himself and his co-trustees, and not his exclusive business as trustee, he is entitled to his costs. A difficulty arose in Craddock v. Piper as to the application of this rule where the business was the joint business of the trustee and his co-trustees and the cestuis que trustent, the question being, whether the incapacity of the trustee to charge for his own business, should absorb or be merged in his capacity to charge for the business of his co-trustees or his cestuis que trustent; and the Lord Chancellor held, that if the costs incurred in the business of the other parties were not increased by the trustee's business being done as part of it, the trustee would be entitled to his costs; but if any greater costs were incurred, by his joining his business to theirs, than would have been incurred on their behalf if they had acted separately, to the extent of the excess, the trustee would not be entitled to his costs.

The case of Craddock v. Piper had reference to the costs of a suit; but we apprehend the principle of the decision applies, and was intended to apply, to business out of court, as well as to the business of proceedings at law or in equity. Now, let us consider the application of the rule to various kinds of business out of court. Take, for instance, the case of a mortgagee with a power of sale. Hitherto it has always been considered that a mortgagee, being a solicitor, selling under his power, could not charge the mortgagor with any costs in respect of his own professional business done in the matter of the sale. Does Craddock v. Piper make, in this case, any difference? The answer will, we conceive, depend on this—whether the mortgagee, in so acting, is acting in his own proper business as mortgagee, or in the business of the mortgagor. And as there cannot, we apprehend, be much doubt, that although the expenses of the sale are generally chargeable to the mortgagor, yet the business of conducting it is the proper business of the mortgagee, who is the vendor, and not of the mortgagor, the mortgagee will still be incapable, if, being a solicitor, he conducts the business of the sale, of charging his own professional costs. But if the case were of several trustees of a settlement, with power of selling, and they sell, and one of them, being a solicitor, acts in the matter of the sale as the solicitor of the trustees, then we conceive that his case would fall within the rule of Craddock v. Piper, and that, contrary to what has been certainly the generally received notion in the Profession, he would be entitled to his costs. So in respect to any business done by a trustee of a will or settlement, being a solicitor, properly and strictly on behalf of the cestuis que trustent, we conceive such trustee will be entitled to his costs;—understanding, of course, by business properly and strictly done on behalf of the cestuis que trustent, business in which they would, quite independently of the trustee, be represented by another solicitor; and not business in which their interests are represented by the trustee; and through him by his solicitor: for in the latter case the business would be the proper business of the trustee himself.

VOL. XIV.

F

Having regard to Graddock v. Piper, the doctrine, as stated by Mr. Jarman, (Byth. Prec. 338, 9th ed.; and 9 Jarm. 731, 3rd ed.), must be considered as too broadly put; as the learned Editor of the Precedents there states it in this form, that "a solicitor, who fills the office of trustee, is unable to charge for business transacted for the trust estate," whereas the rule is, that he may charge for such business, provided it is the business of others, and not his own proper and exclusive business.

It may also be doubted whether the clause suggested in 9 Jarm. Byth. 339, and frequently adopted in settlements, for enabling a trustee solicitor to charge for business done by him for the trust estate as if he were a stranger, will have any effect where the business done is done for cestuis que trustent, not sui juris, and whose interests are, therefore, in effect, represented by the trustee; because the right of the trustee does not appear to depend upon any preceding contract between the trustee and the settlor, but on the single question, whose is the business done. Now, if business is done on behalf of infants or unborn objects of a settlement, it is clear that that is the proper business of the trustee who represents the interests of such objects; and therefore the trustee would have no right to charge, whatever might have been his contract with the adult settlor, for such business, so far as it is his.

ENGLISH COPYRIGHT IN FOREIGN COMPOSITIONS.

Some misapprehension appears to exist, at least among the laity, as to the present state of the law respecting a foreign author's copyright in this country. It has been supposed that the case of Boosey v. Purday (13 Jur., part 1, p. 918) has settled the question adversely to the foreigner; but that case did not come within the present Copyright Act, and the decision, even as regards the construction of the repealed acts, is wholly unsupported by authority, is opposed to several decisions of at least equal weight, and is now under appeal. It appears to us to be also untenable in principle.

In Boosey v. Purday, Bellini, being an alien, resident in the Austrian dominions, had assigned the copyright of his unpublished opera, "Le Sonnambula," to Ricordi, an alien, also resident abroad. Ricordi, coming to London, assigned the copyright to Boosey, who published the work in London on the same day on which it was first published at Milan, but a few hours later—a circumstance which the Court (overruling the decision of Pollock, C. B., at Nisi Prius, commented upon 12 Jur., part 2, p. 323) held to be immaterial. The publication was in 1831, so that the case was governed by the old copyright acts. The Court of Exchequer held that Boosey had no copyright.

The substance of the judgment of the Court, delivered by Pollock, C. B., was as follows:—No Court of common law had decided the question, (this must mean when the Court of Exchequer first expressed its opinion in Chappell v. Purday, 14 M. & W. 308). In Clementi v. Walker (2 B. & Cr. 861) it was to be collected that the Court of King's Bench thought that a foreigner was not entitled to the statutory right. The Lord Chancellor, in Guichard v. Mori, (9 L. J., O. S., Ch., 227), and the Vice-Chancellor, in Delondra v. Shaw, (Id. 237), had expressed opinions against the right of a foreigner; but the latter judge had afterwards intimated that a foreigner might have a copyright, and had directed the question to be tried at law. In the meantime Lord Abinger decided in favour of the right. (D'Almaine v. Boosey, 1 Y. & C. 298; and see Chappell v. Purday, 4 Y. & C. 485). In the state of the authorities, somewhat conflicting as they stood at the time of the decision in the second case of Chappell v. Purday, (14 M. & W. 303), the Court of Exchequer thought they ought not to be precluded from putting what they considered the true construction on the statutes. Subsequently Cocks v. Purday (5 C. B. 860; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 677) had been decided by the Court of Common Pleas, and followed by the Court of Queen's Bench in Boosey v. Davidson, (since reported, 13 Jur., part 1, p. 678), simply, as it seemed, because it had been so decided. But those cases were not binding, because the question on the construction of the English statutes had not been discussed and decided in them. The learned Chief Baron then proceeded to say that a foreigner had no copyright in England by the common law; that his right, if he had any, must depend on the statutes; and that the Legislature must be considered prima facie to legislate for its own subjects by birth or residence; and the object of the statutes was clearly not to encourage the importation of foreign books and their first publication here, but to promote the cultivation of the intellect of its own subjects.

We think that this judgment does not add weight to the decision which it accompanied. It assumes instead of discussing the question. It does not correctly represent the effect of the authorities. They are not conflicting; but the opinion of the Court of Exchequer stands alone and unsupported. The question had been distinctly decided the other way by the Courts of Common Pleas and Queen's Bench, and by Lord Abinger, C. B., sitting in equity; and the foreigner's right had been taken for granted in Clementi v. Walker, Bentley v. Forster, and in the first case of Chappell v. Purday; and it had not been denied in Guichard v. Mori. The view of the construction of the statutes which the Court of Exchequer considers as new had been fully discussed, either by the counsel or by the Court, in Clementi v. Walker, D'Almaine v. Boosey, Cocks v. Purday, and Boosey v. Davidson. It was indeed the only thing that could be discussed in the three latter cases. In the two last cases the judgment in the second case of Chappell v. Purday was pressed upon the attention of the Court; and in Boosey v. Davidson it was attempted to distinguish Cocks v. Purday as a decision not applicable to the statute of Anne. The Court of Exchequer suggests that the sole object of the Legislature was to benefit British authors; but it is very obvious, from the language of the statutes, that the Legislature intended a benefit to the public, by encouraging the production of useful books;—that the advantage of readers, rather than of authors, was contemplated. If authors alone had been considered, the term of copyright would not have been limited.

The existing law applicable to this question cannot be understood apart from its history. The common-law right of an author and his representatives to restrain others from selling copies of his unpublished works has always been recognised, and still subsists. Thus, in The Duke of Queensberry v. Shebbeare, (2 Eden, 329); the publication of Lord Clarendon's History of the Reign of Charles the Second was restrained on the application of his executors, who had the MS., then nearly a century old. Other authorities to the same effect are Webb v. Ross, (cited 4 Burr. 2330; 3 Swanst. 674); Pope v. Curl, (2 Atk. 342); Macklin v. Richardson, (Amb. 694); Thompson v. Stanhope, (Id. 737); Southey v. Sherwood, (2 Mer. 436); Pritchard v. Gee, (2 Swanst. 425); Palay's case, (cited 2 V. & B. 23); Perceval v. Phipps, 2 V. & B. 19; Morris v. Kelly, (1 J. & W. 481); and Abernethy v. Hutchinson, (2 L. J., O. S., Ch., 209). In Prince Albert v. Strange, (1 Mac. & G. 43), Lord Cottenham said, "The property of an author or composer of any work, whether of literature, art, or science, in such work, unpublished, and kept for his private use or pleasure, cannot be disputed after the many decisions in which that right has been affirmed or assumed." That this right is a species of property, and not a mere right to privacy, is shown by Paley's case, and by Macklin v. Richardson and Abernethy v. Hutchinson, where the publication of the work in a parish, on the stage, or in the lecture-room, was held not to destroy the right, (though now the public representation of a play is by statute equivalent to publishing it as a book. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 20).

This right is not lost by publication. Publication in the lecture-room, or on the stage, did not destroy it; nor, in the case of letters, does the receiver take, with the right of property in the letter itself, a right to publish its contents; that remains with the writer. It is not lost by circulating manuscript copies, as in Paley's case; nor even by selling such copies, as in White v. Geroch, (2 B. & A. 298). There is nothing in the act of selling printed copies which should have a different effect. It is a mode of enjoying, and not an abandonment of the property. The author gives the use of his work to the public in a modified manner, and upon certain terms, which cannot be varied without his consent, (see Abernethy v. Hutchinson, 1 L. J., O. S., Ch., 209), any more than (as was said in Tonson v. Collins) the borrower or purchaser of a key, admitting him to private grounds, can make other keys from that, and sell them.

The early development of the law of copyright was impeded by many circumstances. In the infancy of the art of printing, the profits of authorship were not thought of; the value of the materials, and the labour and skill employed in setting up the types of a book, constituted the principal elements of its cost; and copyright was first claimed by the printer, who sought to be protected from rival editions until his own was sold off. This was secured, in individual cases, by exclusive license from the Crown, which assumed not only a right of censorship over the press, but also the sole use of the art of printing, pretending that it had been introduced into the realm at the expense of the Crown. When the author's copy became valuable, protection was sought for it from the same source. The prerogative was then stronger than the law. These patents to individuals, the privileges of the Stationers' Company, (which was established in the reign of Philip & Mary as a kind of literary inquisition), and the several acts for licensing printed books, (the last of which expired in 1694,) hindered the free application of the common law to this species of property; and the usurpations of the prerogative were scarcely abated before the common-law right was abolished, in respect of published works, by the stat. 8 Anne, c. 19; but its existence up to the passing of that act is clearly established. The exclusive licenses granted to individuals were always understood to be an exercise of the Crown's right of censorship, founded in each case on the author's title to his copy. They were never classed with the monopolies prohibited by the statute of James I. The inherent right of an author and his assigns to his copy, independently of royal grant, is assumed in all the acts of Parliament and ordinances for the regulation of printing which preceded the statute of Anne. Thus, in the Licensing Act of the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 33, s. 6, it is enacted, that no one shall print any book "which any person, by force or virtue of any letters-patent granted as aforesaid, or (where the same is not granted by any letters-patent) by force or virtue of any entry thereof duly made in the register-book of the said Company of Stationers, or in the register-book of either of the universities respectively, has, or shall have, the right, privilege, authority, or allowance solely to print; without the consent of the owner of such book." Now, registry with the Stationers' Company conferred no property, but was merely a condition precedent to the liberty of publishing at all; and it was expressly held that this statute gave no new right, but only the new remedy of an action of debt. (The Stationers' Company v. Parker, Skin. 233). The preamble to the stat. 8 Anne, c. 19, is to the same effect:—"Whereas printers, booksellers, and other persons have of late frequently taken the liberty of printing, reprinting, and publishing books and other writings, without the consent of the authors or proprietors of such books and writings, to their very great detriment" &c.; language clearly referring to the invasion of an existing right, though at that time the licensing acts had expired, and the notion of a privilege of monopoly by royal grant was exploded. Indeed, the title of the Crown itself to what were called prerogative copies (such as law books, the translation of the Bible, almanacs, &c.) was always founded on the expense bestowed by the Crown, directly or indirectly, on the compilation of those works. Again, in the enacting part of the statute of Anne, the copyright in books then already printed was secured to the authors, if they had not transferred their copies, or to their assignees, for twenty-one years, "and no longer." There could be no assignees if there were no property to assign. The copyright in books then "already composed, and not printed and published, or that should thereafter be composed," is secured to the authors and their assignees for the term of fourteen years from the day of the first publishing the same, "and no longer." The leaving of a longer term to works already published than was allowed to future works, shews that the act was understood to be restrictive of an existing right. The original bill was intended to secure a perpetual copyright.

Before the ultimate decision in Donaldson v. Beckett, (2 Bro. P. C. 129; 4 Burr. 2303), it was held in several cases that the statute merely gave additional remedies for a term, leaving the author to his right at common law after that term had expired. (Tonson v. Walker, 3 Swanst. 673, and the cases there cited; Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2303). In Tonson v. Collins, cited in Millar v. Taylor, the Court of Queen's Bench, and afterwards the Court of Exchequer Chamber, were prepared to decide unanimously to that effect, but the case was dismissed on the ground of suspected collusion. Those cases were overruled by the House of Lords in Donaldson v. Beckett, as it seems on the satisfactory ground that the words "and no longer," in the statute of Anne, cut down the perpetuity of the common-law right, in cases within the statute, to the period therein specified. The ground of that decision can only be surmised; but as seven of the eleven judges who were consulted, and also Lord Mansfield, who did not speak, were of opinion that at the common law copyright was not destroyed by publication, it is plain that Donaldson v. Beckett did not overrule the prior decisions as to the effect of publication. Of the four judges who spoke the other way, one (Eyre, B.) thought that an author had not the sole right of printing even before publication; and two (Perrott, B., and Adams, B.) thought, that, though he had that right, he could not bring an action against a person printing from his manuscript, unless the copy was obtained by fraud or violence—errors so obvious as greatly to lessen the weight of the opinions with which they were associated.

The objection so strenuously urged by Mr. Justice Yates and others, against including copyright in that notion of property which comprises such incorporeal rights as advowsons, tolls, and franchises, seems absurd enough. It was also beside the question, which was not as to the proper denomination of the right, but whether it existed by the common law in a book printed, as it certainly did in a book merely written, and whether it existed independently of the statute, as it certainly did by virtue of it. The common law recognises other rights than those of property, and has a scope as unlimited as that of the Legislature itself.

It was also urged that literary compositions ought to stand on the same footing as inventions in manufactures; but not to insist on the marked distinction between a literary work, which has an unmistakeable individuality both in itself and in its origin, and an invention, which is a mere conception of a mode of action, that may, and generally does, occur independently to many minds, so that it would be impossible to distinguish between piracy and re-invention, the same considerations of expediency which are the grounds for giving protection in either case, and upon which the institution of property in general is founded, supply a reason for limiting the rights of the inventor more strictly than those of the author. Copyright merely prevents others from making a pecuniary profit of the particular work, and in no way limits the use of the ideas contained in it, or restrains others in the exercise of their own abilities; for two authors cannot write the same book, though two men may invent the same machine. A patent not only secures to the inventor the use of his invention, but prevents another, who may arrive at the same result by his own ingenuity, from turning it to account. To give a perpetual monopoly to the one who happens first to perceive and put in practice that which in the natural progress of the arts is sure to occur to many, would be to fetter and not to encourage improvement.

The right of an alien author to protection for his copies by the common law does not appear to have been expressly decided; but it is a necessary consequence of the rules of law with respect to aliens. With some exceptions as to land, founded on feudal and political reasons, an alien, whether resident here or abroad, has the same rights in respect of property and contracts as a natural-born subject would have under the same circumstances. It was resolved in Calvin's case (7 Rep. 17) that "an alien friend may by the common law have, acquire, and get, within the realm, by gift, trade, or other lawful means, any treasure or goods personal whatsoever, as well as any Englishman, and may maintain any action for the same; for if they should be disabled to acquire and maintain these things, it were in effect to deny unto them trade and traffic, which is the life of every island." (See Dy. 2 b; Cro. Car. 8; 2 Taunt. 37; Bac. Ab., "Alien," D.; Com. Dig., "Alien," C. 5). So completely are all the personal rights of an alien, not involving the possession of land, or the exercise of constitutional privileges, recognised by our law, that an alien resident abroad may maintain an action for the slander of his reputation in this country; Tuerloote v. Morison, (Yelv. 198; Bulst. 134); Pisani v. Lawson, (8 Scott, 182), in which last case the doctrine was rested upon general considerations of justice, and not on the expediency of encouraging commerce. This maxim of the common law has been confirmed by a declaratory enactment in the recent Alien Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, s. 4. An alien author was therefore clearly entitled by the common law to the same protection of his property in his unpublished compositions as a native, and the act of publishing or procuring the publication of the work here could not be an abandonment of that right in the one case more than in the other. It seems to us that the right might have been carried further; for as publication here is not an abandonment of the copy, publication abroad, whether by a British subject or by a stranger, cannot be so, unless that interpretation is put upon it by the local law, in which case it might perhaps be thought to defeat the right everywhere. But see Beard v. Egerton, (3 C. B. 97). Subject, however, to the effect of any local law, it seems to be clear that by the common law an author, whether native or alien, and whether he first published here or abroad, had a perpetual copyright in his works.

The question remains, whether this right has been taken away by the Legislature in the case of an alien. The provisions of the copyright acts must be as extensively applicable as the common law which they superseded, unless their operation is limited by express words or necessary implication. The stat. 8 Anne, c. 19, after giving protection for twenty-one years to books then already printed, confers on the author of a book or books "already composed, and not printed and published, or that shall hereafter be composed," a copyright for fourteen years from the day of the first publishing the same. Here the word "composed" is evidently used merely for the purpose of distinguishing the class of future books from that of existing copyrights, which are secured for a longer term; and it cannot be taken to refer to compositions in this country exclusively, although in Clementi v. Walker (2 B. & Cr. 861) the words "printed and published" appear to have been read with that limitation. In the stat. 12 Geo. 2, c. 36, "for prohibiting the importation of books reprinted abroad, and first composed or written and printed in Great Britain," the conjunctive "and" certainly makes the fact of composition in this country essential to bring a book within the protection of that act; but any argument founded on that expression is displaced by the language of the stat. 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, "for the further encouragement of learning," &c., where the words are, (sect. 7), "first composed, written, or printed and published in any part of the United Kingdom." The act now in force (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45) is very differently expressed; and by the repeal of the former acts, and the omission of the important words "and no longer," furnishes some ground for contending that the common-law copyright is restored, and may now subsist concurrently with or after the expiration of the statutory title. (See Boosey v. Tolkien, 5 C. B. 476). In the interpretation clause of that act, the word "assign" is defined to mean "every person in whom the interest of an author in copyright shall be vested, whether derived from such author before or after the publication of any book." The 3rd section vests the copyright of every book published after the passing of the act in the author or his assigns; and as the copyright of an alien is certainly not taken away by the statute before publication, it follows that at least the assignee of such copyright resident here, and first publishing here, is entitled to the benefit of the act. The word "composed" occurs but once in the act. The expression throughout is "first publication," except in the 17th section, which is founded on the prohibitory clauses in some of the repealed acts, (referred to in an article on this subject in 12 Jur., part 2, p. 322), and prohibits under penalties the unauthorised importation of copies "of any printed books first composed or written, or printed and published, in any part of the United Kingdom, wherein there shall be copyright."

There is nothing, then, in the repealed acts, or in that now in force, to place aliens upon a less advantageous footing than natural-born subjects in respect of copyright. Either they give to an alien the same copyright which they give to a subject, or they do not apply to him at all, and leave him his common-law right. An expression in the first international Copyright Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 59, s. 1, has been supposed to sanction a different construction of the repealed acts. That act authorises the Crown, by order in Council, to direct that the authors of books which shall be published in any foreign country, to be therein specified, shall have the sole liberty of printing and reprinting such books within the British dominions, for such term as her Majesty shall direct, "not exceeding the term which authors, being British subjects, are now by law entitled to in respect of books first published within the United Kingdom." The widest inference that can be drawn from this is, that it was thought there might be a doubt as to the rights of aliens. The object was to furnish a precise measure of the term to be granted; not to risk the efficacy of the enactment on the correctness of a reference purporting to embrace every case, but to select an instance which should be free from doubt. If the expression suggests a doubt as to aliens, it leaves the question open, whether aliens, if not within the copyright acts, may have a perpetual copyright by the common law. That the intention was not to refer to every possible case of copyright is also plain from the reference to first publication here, coupled with the enactment in the 14th section of the same act, "that the author of any book, to be, after the passing of this act, first published out of her Majesty's dominions, shall have no copyright therein within her Majesty's dominions, otherwise than such (if any) as he may become entitled to under this act:" an enactment not declaratory of an existing law, but confined to publication subsequent to its passing, and implying that, under the prior law, first publication here was not essential, although, as we shall see, prompt publication was. A further inference from that enactment is, that foreign authors first publishing here would still be entitled to copyright. That act, however, furnishes no guide to the construction of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, and it has been repealed by the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 112, which re-enacts the provision in the 14th section of the repealed act, but does not repeat the reference to "authors being British subjects."

The conclusion which we have drawn from general considerations is well supported by authority. That an alien author, temporarily residing in this country, and first publishing here, is entitled to protection, was assumed in Back v. Longman, (Cowp. 623).

In Clementi v. Walker (2 B. & Cr. 861) a piece of music had been published at Paris, in June, 1814, with the sanction of the composer, who in the September following, being in England, verbally sold the work to the plaintiffs, who published here in the same month. In 1818 the defendant published without the plaintiffs' authority. In 1822 the composer executed a formal assignment, in writing, to the plaintiffs. It was held, that, the parol assignment being ineffectual, there was no publication here, either by the author or by his assignee, before the year 1822, and that the work, having in the meantime been fairly published by a third party, became publici juris. The Court was of opinion that the statutes contemplated books printed as well as published here, and that no protection was intended to be given where the author prints and publishes abroad only, without ever publishing here, or without publishing within a reasonable time after the publication abroad, and before any other person has fairly published on his own account. Whether the act of publishing abroad made the work at once publici juris it was not necessary to decide. In that case the Court evidently assumed, that if the author had first published here he would have been entitled to protection; so that, as far as it goes, it favours the alien's claim. Bayley, J., said, "The case, therefore, is reduced to this—whether an author, who first publishes abroad, and, instead of using due diligence to publish here, forbears to publish until some other, fairly and without blame, publishes here, can insist upon his privilege." What privilege, if he could not have a copyright under any circumstances? Again: "The different statutes which give protection to authors do not give it as to all books, but as to printed books only." This observation is the key to the whole of the judgment; and, if it had been well considered by the Court of Exchequer in Boosey v. Purday, might have led them to a different conclusion.

Delondre v. Shaw (2 Sim. 237) has no bearing on this question. In that case an application to restrain the piracy of a label constituting a trade-mark was refused, because the bill did not charge a fraudulent use of the mark to promote the sale of a spurious article. The Vice-Chancellor added, that the case could not be rested on copyright, because the Court does not protect the copyright of a foreigner. That was said with reference to a label which not only was first printed and published in France, but was not a literary composition at all, and, as an engraving, was, by the express terms of the stat. 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, unprotected, because engraved out of Great Britain. That was the single point decided in Page v. Townsend, (5 Sim. 395).

Guichard v. Mori (9 L. J., O. S., Ch., 227) was a mere repetition of Clementi v. Walker.

In D'Almaine v. Boosey, (1 Y. & C. 288), Lord Abinger, C. B., sitting in equity, decided that the English assignee of a foreign work, first publishing here, was entitled to copyright.

In Bentley v. Forster (10 Sim. 329) the assignee of a foreign author domiciled in England was held entitled to protection for a work which had been composed, as it seems, abroad. The Vice-Chancellor continued the injunction, and said that, in his opinion, a work first published here was protected, although composed abroad by an alien. He directed an action to be brought, according to the usual practice, but the defendant submitted.

In Chappell v. Purday (4 Y. & C. 485) the question was the same as in Clementi v. Walker, and Lord Abinger, C. B., treating it as doubtful, refused to interfere by injunction; but he reiterated his opinion on the general principle. In the second case of Chappell v. Purday (14 M. & W. 303) the point actually decided was the same as in Clementi v. Walker. The Court said, that clearly a foreigner, first publishing abroad, could neither have nor confer a copyright here at common law or by the statute; and though admitting that the authorities pointed to a different conclusion, they added that they thought it doubtful whether a foreigner, not resident here, could have an English copyright at all. This doubt was the germ of the decision in Boosey v. Purday.

In Cocks v. Purday (5 C. B. 860*) the case came within the present Copyright Act, and after full argument it was decided that there was copyright in the work of an alien residing abroad, published here, contemporaneously with the publication abroad, by an English publisher, claiming under a verbal assignment from the author which was valid according to the law of the place where it was made. The decision was expressly founded on the general principle, that an alien may acquire personal rights and maintain personal actions in respect of injuries to them in this country.

In Boosey v. Davidson, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 678), as in Boosey v. Purday, the work in question was Bellini's Sonnambula; so that the case differed from that of Cocks v. Purday, in not coming within the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. It was fully argued, and the Court of Queen's Bench decided in favour of the copyright.

The authorities, with the exception of Boosey v. Purday, are consistent with each other, and with principle. We think they are also consistent with justice and sound policy. It is true that in some countries, the United States for example, no copyright can be secured in the works of an author who is not a resident citizen; but it would neither be a good example to other countries, nor any compensation to English authors, if the cheap sale of American works in this country were promoted by robbing American authors of their copyright.

"... A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times, Oct. 6, 1849.

"... The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. There never was less book-making in any book than in this."
 —Law Magazine, N. S., No. 3.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases. ... presenting the authorities on each point in the ipseissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the data to which they relate."—Law Magazine, No. 22.

"A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist,
 No. 568, Oct. 27, 1849.

QUARTERLY SALE of CHAMBER PROPERTY — REVERSIONS — SHARES in VARIOUS LIFE and FIRE INSURANCE OFFICES, &c.

MR. HAMMOND begs to notify that the above SALE by AUCTION will take place at his Great Rooms, 28, Chancery-lane, on WEDNESDAY, February 20, at Twelve o'clock, and comprises Six capital Sets of Chambers at Gray's-inn; Absolute Reversions to Money in the Funds; and Original Shares in the Law Life, Legal and General Law Fire, Equity and Law, and Solicitors' General Insurance Offices; the whole of which are well deserving the attention of the Legal Profession and Capitalist. Particulars &c. to be had at the Estate Agency Office, 28, Chancery-lane.

VALUABLE CHAMBER PROPERTY on the Ground and First Floors of No. 5, Raymond-buildings, Gray's-inn, nearly equal to Freehold.

MR. HAMMOND has instructions from the Executors of the late Jeffries Spranger, Esq., Benchers of Gray's-inn, to SELL by AUCTION, at his Great Rooms, No. 28, Chancery-lane, on WEDNESDAY, February 20, at Twelve o'clock, the Beneficial Interest in Two Sets of very superior Business Chambers, situate as above, in the best part of Gray's-inn, held for ever under the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn, upon payment of a trifling Septennial Fine, and let to G. T. Nicholson and James Pinner, Esqrs., at rents of 180l. per annum, and will form an important purchase for investment. Particulars &c. of Sale to be had of Messrs. Vanderboom, Cree, Law, & Comyn, 23, Bush-lane, City; at the Steward's Office, Gray's-inn; and at the Auctioneer's Office, 28, Chancery-lane.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE, A. D. 1720. — INCORPORATED by Charter of his Majesty George the First — CHIEF OFFICE, in the ROYAL EXCHANGE. Branch Office, No. 22, PAUL MALL.

LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES may be effected on the most advantageous terms with this Corporation, which has transacted business in all departments during a period exceeding a Century and a Quarter, and affords unquestionable Security by its Capital Stock.

The reversionary BONUS declared on British Life Policies effected on the system of participation in profits has amounted on an average to rather more than 2l. per Cent. per Annum on the Sum assured, or 40l. per Cent. on the amount of Premium paid.

Equivalent reductions have been made in the Annual Premiums payable by those of the Assured who desired that their share of profit should be so applied.

The position and character so long maintained by the Corporation afford a sufficient guarantee that this Bonus has been declared out of Surplus actually realised, and not by anticipating future Profits.

Policies are granted for sums payable to the Assured on their attaining any specified age, or to their representatives in case of their premature death.

Persons assured with this chartered Corporation are exempt from the liabilities of Partnership.

The practice of promptly deciding upon proposals, of registering and acknowledging notices of assignments, and giving information as to prior notices, is important to Members of the Legal Profession; and the granting Assurances to the extent of 10,000l. on a Life saves trouble to Clients as well as Solicitors, by obviating the necessity of appearance and examination at numerous offices.

The usual Commission is allowed to Solicitors, on introduction of Life Assurances, and is annually reserved for the same parties, notwithstanding the possible payment of subsequent Premiums through different Members of the Profession.

ALEX. GREEN, Secretary.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 23, 1850.

THE latest decisions upon the liability of provisional committeemen are of peculiar interest to lawyers, as tending to determine the new and somewhat equivocal position in which a large and important class of society have placed themselves, or have been placed by the decisions of our legal tribunals. We have therefore selected, as the subject of some observations, the cases of Burnside v. Dayrell (3 Exch. 224) and Moore v. Garwood, (19 L. J., Ex., 15), recently decided in that favourite arena for allottees and committeemen—the Court of Exchequer, and affirmed (as to Moore v. Garwood) in the Court of Exchequer Chamber. Burnside v. Dayrell was an action for the recovery of a deposit paid by an allottee of shares in a projected railway company. The deposit had been paid by the plaintiff into a bank named in the prospectus, in which the defendant's name appeared as one of the provisional committee, and as chairman of the committee of management. The defendant had been present at only one meeting, at which he presided as chairman, and he then dissented from the proceedings. This meeting was held after the plaintiff had applied for shares, but before they had been allotted to him. It was held that the defendant was not liable to refund the deposit, because he was not the person, nor one of the persons, by whom it had been received; that the payment into the bank was not a payment to his use, nor was there any proof that he ever received, or could have received, any part of the money; that there was no difference, as far as he was concerned, between money received by other members of the provisional committee and goods furnished by order of such other members; that in the one case the parties must look to those to whom the payment was made, and in the other to those by whom the goods were ordered; or if credit was given, it must be shewn to have been given by the sanction of those whom it is sought to charge. The Court distinguished this case from that of Walstab v. Spottiswoods, upon the grounds, that in the latter case the secretary was the agent designated by the defendant as the person to whom application for shares should be made, and the money paid to him was, therefore, paid to the defendant himself; that the case there proceeded on that assumption, the argument not turning on the point, whether the defendant was one of the parties to whose hands the deposit had come, but, admitting that to be the fact, whether it could be recovered; and that the defendant was an active person in the management of the concern. There does not, however, appear any substantial distinction between the two cases, and we doubt whether a state of facts similar to those in Walstab v. Spottiswoods will lead to a similar decision, if this objection as to the receipt of the money be taken. It would seem that an action for the recovery of the deposit, under such circumstances, should be brought against the parties in whose names the account was opened with the bank where the money was kept, or who have received or expended the money, or have concurred in or sanctioned the contract made with the plaintiff. The decision in Burnside v. Dayrell places, it will be observed, provisional committeemen on the same footing, both as regards money received and goods received; the principles upon which Regnell v. Lewis and Hopkins v. Wyld (15 M. & W. 517) proceeded will, therefore, be applicable to actions for the recovery of deposits. (See also Bailey v. Macaulay, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 80). In such actions the plaintiff should be prepared to prove, as a material part of his case, to whose credit he paid the money; and, if it appear to have been to the credit of the company generally, any active committeeman will, it seems, be liable, according to the decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Moore v. Garwood. That also was an action by an allottee against a member of the managing committee for the recovery of a deposit paid (according to the directions contained in the prospectus) into a bank to the credit of the company. The Court, affirming the judgment below, held the defendant to be liable.

VOL. XIV.

It was contended that there was no evidence to shew that the defendant had drawn, or had power to draw, the money out; and that even if the managing committee had power to make cheques, the money was not received by them until actually drawn out. Maule, J., thereupon asked, "Suppose the money was paid in to the credit of the defendant and others, is not the non-joinder of the rest merely matter of a plea in abatement? No company was ever formed. If the money were paid in to the credit of all, and all had been sued, there would have been no difficulty." The Court, in delivering judgment upon this part of the case, said, "The case of Watson v. The Earl of Charlemont (13 Jur., part 1, p. 117) is very distinguishable. There the money was paid into the bank to the credit of one of the defendants and of five other persons by name, as trustees for the railway company, and the other two defendants were not of the number of those five. Here the letter of allotment, which is admitted to have been issued by the defendant, states, in effect, that the money is to be paid in to the bankers to the credit of the railway company."

It should also be stated, that in Moore v. Garwood the defendant was an active member, having attended almost every meeting; and there was some evidence to shew that he had acted as if he had a control over the deposits.

This case was not noticed in Burnside v. Dayrell; it would, we think, have been more satisfactory to have had them both considered together and reconciled or distinguished.

The material facts in Watson v. The Earl of Charlemont have been already stated; but the following observations of the Court, in delivering judgment, shew more fully the grounds of that decision:—"There is no evidence of the money having ever come to the hands, or to have been at the disposal, of the three defendants. Indeed, Lord Charlemont may have been precisely in the same situation as the plaintiff himself, except that his lordship was on the provisional committee. In Wentner v. Shairp (4 C. B. 406) the defendant was one of the managing committee, which issued the false statement, and had the control and disposition of the deposits."

In connexion with this subject, we must not omit to remind our readers of the important batch of cases lately reported in THE JURIST, under the title of Bailey v. Macaulay, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 80), and which we propose to consider in a future article.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Aston Davoren, Esq., to be Puisne Justice of the Island of St. Christopher; and George John Crawford, Esq., to be Second Judge of the Supreme Court of the colony of South Australia.

Abstracts.

On Probate Courts. By THOMAS FALCONER, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister at Law. [London: Reynell & Weight, Little Pulleney-street. 1856.]

This is an extremely well-written pamphlet on a subject, the importance of which it would not be easy to overrate. Of the evils which he seeks to remove, Mr. Falconer gives an able as well as very happy summary in the opening paragraph. The concluding sentence is remarkable for the felicity of expression with which it describes the effect of the present working of the law:—

"It is no exaggeration to represent the existing law relating to the probate of wills, and the administration of the estates of deceased persons, to be the cause of great annoyance, distress, and expense. So many persons are interested in the continuance of the system, that it is almost hopeless to expect that any change will be made in it for many years to come, which shall completely remove the very just and rational grounds of complaint which it causes. The evils the law occasions are easily removable, if there were any sincerity and earnestness of purpose among those whose duty it is to remove them; but there is no such earnestness, and there is no intention at the present time to effect any other change than such as will, in fact, perpetuate the chief causes of complaint. Yet, from the evils which exist, no purity of intention, no candid or fair dealing, no upright or open behaviour can protect any person. They come almost inevitably on the most innocent, and no care or forethought can ward them off. When a man dies his property is distributable under the terms of his will, or, if he dies intestate, it is distributable under certain rules of law; it either belongs to the persons indicated by the testator, or to those whom the law marks out. Though it belongs to such persons, it is usually held as a stake to be wrestled for. The law invites members of families to contend for it; it calls in strangers to partake in the dispute; it offers dishonest attorneys certain reward if they will interfere, and more especially if they will give dishonest advice; it summons creditors to join in the contest, and scourges them for being present; and, among relatives, to the affliction of mourning it adds dismay and ruin, or grievous and unjust privation." (Pp. 3, 4).

The changes in the present system that Mr. Falconer thinks are needed are—

"1. That in each county there shall be a court of probate—a civil and no longer an ecclesiastical court—presided over by an educated lawyer.

"2. That every county court of probate may issue probates of wills and letters of administration, without any reference to the value of the personal estate of the deceased—such probates and letters of administration to be issued in the county where the deceased person was domiciled, and to be valid and operative throughout England and Wales.

"These two changes would abolish so much of the present law relating to probates and letters of administration as depends on mere jurisdiction, and some notabilia. They would affect, though in a different manner, the purposes of the bill of the House of Lords.

"More, however, than this is needed. Under the authority conferred by a court of probate in issuing an authority to administer an estate, there are duties to be performed, and it is all-important that the court of probate should superintend and enforce their fulfilment. To effect this, other steps must be taken.

"3. Executors and administrators should be required, within a certain time, to collect the estate, to discharge debts, to pay legacies, to distribute the residue, and to file an account or report with the court.

"4. As executors and administrators cannot be pressed to conclude the execution of their duties without an expensive process, as they are also frequently unable to obtain the necessary assistance, and as those who advise them are always interested in delay, an official administrator should be attached to each court, who should act in such cases as the court of probate should regard necessary, and always on the application of executors and administrators, of creditors, and of those interested in the bulk of the property. The duties of the official administrators would not materially differ from those of the official assignee in the Court of Bankruptcy.

"5. Whatever may be the state of the claims on the estate at the death of the deceased, so they should remain, as they affect the estate to be administered, to the moment of their settlement.

"6. The entire funds and property of the deceased should be under the control of the court of probate. No proceedings at law or in Chancery should be permitted without an order of this court. On the application of creditors, of legatees, or next of kin, money and property should be secured, if there is any hazard of loss; the investment of trust monies directed, the court of probate having power to construe the terms of a will; and the investment of money ordered even in cases where the executors or administrators may be called on to replace it, if the deceased has committed a breach of trust.

"The courts of probate would thus become county courts of equity, and inquiries would be conducted as inquiries are now conducted in the Court of Bankruptcy. When necessary, a case should be stated for the formal decision of the court, and it should have power to order a trial of issues.

"An appeal from the courts of probate should in all cases be allowed to the Court of Chancery." (Pp. 22, 23).

If it is meant, in the sixth article in the passage above quoted, that the court of probate should have power to construe the terms of a will, whatever may be the amount of property affected by the will, this clause, besides being open to other objections, would have the effect of ousting the superior Courts of law and equity of their jurisdiction. In order to render it practicable it will be necessary to confine the power to questions involving property of a certain limited amount. This would bring the system proposed as to probate courts into harmony with that of the county courts. The same objection appears, in part at least, to apply to the proposal, that "no proceedings at law or in Chancery should be permitted without an order of this court." Would not the effect of these two regulations, taken together, be to take the determination of some of the most difficult questions that arise in the legal Profession out of the courts where the most eminent and able lawyers preside as judges, and give it to courts in which the judges who are to preside, whatever may be their natural abilities and their integrity, cannot be expected to be selected from those members of their Profession whose natural abilities have been improved to the utmost, in the way of professional skill and knowledge, by that enlarged experience which can be attained by long and extensive practice, and by nothing else? But, independently of the merits of the question, we doubt whether a measure could be carried at present which should propose to give unlimited jurisdiction in regard to the construction of wills. Of the nature and extent of the difficulties of this question, and of the danger of intrusting the construction of wills to any but men of great judgment, as well as learning and knowledge, an idea may be formed from the following excellent observations in the "Prefatory Remarks" to Messrs. Hayes & Jarman's Concise Forms of Wills:—

"A notion has unfortunately obtained, that, while to

'the preparation of a deed learning and experience are essential, the disposition of a man's property by will may be safely confided to the minimum of legal knowledge. Hence the conveyancer is rarely consulted, the solicitor is often dispensed with, and the schoolmaster too frequently called in; or, if the schoolmaster be not at hand, there is commonly to be found in every village a will-maker of equal courage and ability, the collector or inheritor of exploded forms and phrases. This notion proceeds upon the twofold error, that wills are expounded, not according to the rules of law, but according to the dictates of common sense, and that common sense is the same in all men. The rules of law, when applied (as applied they must be) to wills thus unadvisedly prepared, often defeat the intention—that is, the probable intention; but if those rules were discarded for a season, common sense, outraged by the conflict of opinion, making one poor word, perhaps, the sport of many contrariant decisions, would soon demand their restoration. The general impression, however, that wills are not amenable to the strict rules of legal construction extended its influence to the judicature, and induced a certain laxity of interpretation, which confirmed and encouraged the original error. Thus confident ignorance on the one hand, and judicial indulgence on the other, produced and reproduced blunders and obscurities of every shape and shade, which have swelled the mass of adjudication, without advancing the law as a science. But we may observe, in some of the later judgments, a tendency to establish a wholesome strictness of construction, to discountenance arguments drawn from vague and speculative views of the intention, and to recur to Lord Coke's 'good rule, always to judge in such cases (i. e. cases of informal wills) as near as may be, and according to the rules of law.' By steadily acting upon this sage advice, by shewing that the principles of interpretation applicable to deeds and wills, which (with two or three well-established exceptions) are the same in their institution, are likewise the same in their application, the Profession and the Public would soon be taught that the last important office of providing for the disposal of men's possessions, when death has precluded the possibility of explanation or correction, requires at least the same degree of information and intelligence which is confessedly necessary to the conveyance of a rood of land from a seller to a purchaser. Such an inflexible course of decision would tend to abate, even in professional men, somewhat of that confidence which now prompts them to draw wills without any previous study, relying upon intention as the law of the instrument, and the liberal rectifier of all blunders.

"There cannot, indeed, be a greater mistake than that of supposing that a very small stock of legal terms, added to a very ordinary education, suffices to accomplish the will-maker. On the contrary, a will is alone capable of exhausting the science and ingenuity of the most able conveyancer. It may embrace every allowable modification of property, every possible scheme of disposition."

As wills are too often drawn, they become most fertile sources of doubt and uncertainty—of most doubt, perhaps, in the minds most anxious to arrive at a satisfactory solution of their doubts. Mr. Maddock, in the Preface to his Chancery Practice, mentions one case which, though extreme, may shew the evil in its worst form. He says, "One I remember before a great judge, and he begins his decision by saying, 'Having had doubts upon this will for twenty years,' &c." (Preface, p. ix).

Even assuming that the doubts of this "great judge" found a correct solution at the end of twenty years, it may well be questioned whether such slow justice as this is not at least as bad as quick injustice. Moreover, reasons have been urged in favour of a jurisdiction unlimited as to the amount of the property at stake, which are entitled to the most careful consideration. Why, it has been asked, should the unnecessary expense of an application to the superior Court be incurred, merely because the testator left money enough to pay for it? If anybody objects to the decision of the county court on any point, let him appeal on that point, and on that point only. If there be a real doubt of the goodness of the decision, it is well that there should be an appeal. The applications to the superior Courts from improper motives would also be greatly reduced. Instead of the present most expensive machinery, by which so much of the estate of the testator passes away from his representatives in the course of an administration suit, what would be the case on the plan proposed? An appeal on dry matter of law, whether such a decision on such a point was or was not right. No receiverships, no long bills, no proceedings in the Master's office, by which half, or more than half, of the estate is absolutely wasted, under, to borrow the words of the Vice-Chancellor on an occasion referred to by Mr. Falconer, "the usual decree for destroying the estate in due course of law."

It is also asked, what is to prevent the judges of the county courts from applying the decisions of the superior Courts so as generally to be satisfactory to the Profession, at least when they shall have been some time in practice? As far as the question has reference to the more difficult points arising on the construction of wills, we certainly do not see what is to prevent them, provided they can be selected from that class of lawyers to whom most of such questions are at present submitted in chambers, and whose opinion is, in a large proportion of such cases, accepted by the parties as sufficiently satisfactory to deter them from the expensive course of taking the opinion of the Court thereon. But our proviso will, we fear, be found one, the conditions of which will be attended with some difficulty.

In regard to the number of new judges that may be necessary, the writer says—

"In the appointment of the judges of probate courts, it may not be necessary to appoint a single judge for each county. The facility which certain lines of railway may afford to move from one county town to another would enable the union of the judgeships of two probate courts to be made in several instances, without any great personal inconvenience. It will be proper, however, that there should be as little moving of the judge from one place to another as possible. His residence should be permanently near his court, and he ought rarely to be required to leave his usual abode. The arrangements of county courts necessarily impose on the judges of such courts almost continued travelling from one place to another. But what is a great personal inconvenience in the one case is not an unavoidable one in the other, except in the rare case when the judgeships of two courts should be combined." (P. 31).

As to the inconvenience of the dispersion of wills in different depositories throughout the kingdom—

"The dispersion of wills in different depositories in the kingdom has, in practice, been found to be a very great and serious evil. It precludes the possibility, in many instances, of ascertaining the existence of wills, and it greatly increases the cost and trouble of searches. The proposal which has been most generally made has been, that all wills should be deposited in London. The objection to this is, that, in case of accident, all the wills in the kingdom would be destroyed. There would be no reasonable argument against allowing original wills to be preserved in the registry of each county probate court; and as a fee of 6d. per folio would amply cover the expense of duplicate copies, one might be kept for inspection in

'the registry of the probate court, and the other might be forwarded to the general registry in London. The additional payment of 2d. per will would form a sufficient fund to discharge the expenses of printing a calendar of the wills in the general registry.' (P. 31).

Mr. Falconer has given, in his pamphlet, an abstract of the probate laws of Massachusetts. Of the system of probate courts throughout the United States he thus speaks:—

"When the writer was in the United States he was much struck by the system of probate courts which exists throughout that country, and the feeling of approbation and satisfaction which prevailed respecting its advantage and usefulness. The courts are not constituted in the same manner in every state, though a probate court is established in nearly every county in each state. In Ohio the county court, held by justices of the peace in each county, has jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons; in Louisiana there are district courts of probate, which sit in all months except July, August, September, and October, when special courts are held; in Mississippi there is a probate court in each county; in Georgia there are probate courts in each county; in Maryland the court for hearing testamentary matters is called the Orphans' Court, and is held in each county; and in Virginia the county court issues probates of wills, and the general court has also original jurisdiction in the same matters. It is in the State of Massachusetts that the best provisions for the guidance of such courts prevail; and it was on this account that the writer requested the Honourable George Bancroft, the late Minister of the United States at the Court of St. James, to obtain for him an abstract of the law relating to them. With this request Mr. Bancroft, whose readiness to afford information and render assistance in any inquiry respecting his own country the writer had frequently experienced in America, most readily complied. In the month of February, 1847, he sent to him the manuscript of the following excellent abstract, drawn up by Mr. Francis Edward Parker, a barrister of much zeal and ability, resident in Boston." (P. 32).

In reference to his reasons for citing at some length the law and practice of probate courts in Massachusetts, Mr. Falconer has the following very just observations:—

"The above particulars of the law of Massachusetts are not cited on account of any belief that the law is so well interpreted in the United States as in this country, since we acknowledge the value of extreme accuracy and uniformity of decision. It is far, however, from being anywhere badly administered. Popular criticism sometimes condemns it: the arguments of advocates and the decisions of judges are frequently more remarkable for their length, and the wideness of their research, than for brevity, logical arrangement, or precision; but it very universally accomplishes the great end of legal administration—satisfaction and contentment with the law among the great majority of the population. Derived, however, as the legal system in America is from our own, it is not without instruction to notice such departures from it as are found to facilitate the administration of the law; and as an illustration of a successful, instructive, and beneficial legal institution, the Probate Courts of Massachusetts are cited. There are some things provided for, such as the appointment of guardians, and the registration of the wills of persons living, which were once included among the powers of our ecclesiastical courts. The duties of the public administrator are not so comprehensive as they, perhaps, ought to be; and this may be occasioned by the absence of those securities which in this country would permit them to be more comprehensive, and the performance of them more certain." (P. 50).

The following case is the last of many such cases which have come before the board of guardians, in a district where there are many small freeholders, who hold their lands under similarly imperfect proceedings, and which shew the urgent need of the intervention of a Court of equity in cases where the property is small in value:—J. F. was in possession of a piece of land which he said was his own, and also, in right of his wife, B. F., of a house and land, which she inherited from her father. J. F. mortgaged the whole to S. B., who has the deeds, for 100*l.*, the wife not joining in the mortgage deed. J. F. dies. A son, G. F., persuades the mother to sell, and becomes the purchaser for 200*l.*, and is let into possession, depositing with the vendor's attorney (really the mortgagee's attorney) 50*l.* It is discovered that J. F. had no conveyance of the land to himself in his own name, and that he came in on the agreement of one C., deceased, to whom alone any deed of conveyance exists previous to the mortgage deed to S. B. The son refuses to support his mother; he refuses to proceed until they make out a conveyance; and the mother goes to the workhouse, though her property in the hands of her son is sufficient for her maintenance.

The Laws relating to the Land-tax: its Assessment, Collection, Redemption, and Sale; with a Statement of the Rights and Remedies of Persons unequally assessed; and an Appendix, containing all the Statutes in Force; with a copious Index. By SAMUEL MILLER, Esq., Barrister at Law. [London, S. Sweet, 1849.]

This promises to be a useful book on an important subject—a subject, indeed, of much greater importance in a legislative and constitutional than in a strictly legal point of view. Our business here, however, is only with the latter, which will be best understood from the following extract from Mr. Miller's Preface:—

"Nearly fifteen years have now elapsed since the writer first endeavoured to direct public attention to the anomalous condition of the laws relating to the collection and assessment of the land-tax; and had his suggestions been adopted, for an equalisation of this tax, an increase to the revenue of at least fifty millions sterling would ere this have been secured, without the slightest inconvenient pressure.

"The writer's pamphlet containing his suggestions having gone through three editions, it is fair to conclude that it has obtained some attention; and he feels justified, therefore, in continuing his exertions to accomplish an object which he has so long considered to be of the first importance to the community.

"The amount of land-tax unredeemed and annually collected is about 1,200,000*l.*; and this is so unequally assessed, that while in some parts of the country the parties assessed are paying more than 3*s.* in the pound, in other places the rate collected is only a few pence, and in others less than a farthing in the pound. Thus, in the borough of Marylebone, and in the borough of Liverpool, the tax is less than a farthing in the pound, while in the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, it is 1*s.* 10*d.*, in some parts of the city of Westminster more than 2*s.*, and in several places in the city of London more than 3*s.* in the pound.

"The cause of this inequality is readily explained. In the year 1798, Mr. Pitt, the then Prime Minister, being desirous, for the purposes of public credit, of withdrawing a large amount of stock from the public funds, adopted the expedient of enabling parties to redeem and purchase land-tax, by which it was expected that about eighty millions of stock would be absorbed. To accomplish this object, it was necessary, in the first place, so to adjust the assessment of the tax that the greatest facilities should be afforded to parties desirous of redeeming, and accordingly, in the year 1798, the act of the 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, was passed, by which the sum of 1,989,873*l.* was directed to be raised for land-tax in England and Wales, in the proportions fixed upon the several counties and other places specified in the act; and, in order to collect the specified sums, the commissioners were directed to appoint assessors for the parishes and places in the several divisions within each county, who were to settle the quota to be contributed by such parishes and places.

"The act directs that the tax should be raised with as much equality and indifference as possible; but as a foundation for this impartiality, and as if in mockery of the provision, the commissioners and assessors were directed to be governed in their assessments by those made under the act passed for the collection of land-tax in the reign of William & Mary, (1692). So readily did the parties appointed to carry the act into execution avail themselves of the latitude thus given, and so regardless were they of equality and indifference in their assessments, that, with comparatively few exceptions, the quota fixed upon the several parishes and places under the act of 1798 was precisely the same as that levied in the reign of William & Mary. A striking example of this mode of assessment is furnished by the borough of Liverpool, the land-tax for which, in the reign of William & Mary, including the rate levied in respect of offices and pensions, and personal estate, was 802*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, of which 633*l.* 15*s.* was raised for the duties on offices, &c.; and, the latter duties having been repealed, the amount now assessed upon this borough, including the amount redeemed, is 168*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* Manchester, Preston, Bath, Bristol, Leeds, and other large towns present similar anomalies.

"The ground having been thus prepared by a pretended revision and general settlement of the assessments, the next step was to prepare for the redemption; and for this purpose the act of the 38 Geo. 3, c. 60, was passed, by which the land-tax, as then collected, was declared perpetual, subject to redemption. In proposing the resolutions upon which this act was founded, Mr. Pitt expressly declared that they left the question of a more equal repartition of the land-tax precisely where they found it, and in support of this position made use of the following observations:—"Parliament now has the undoubted right of raising more than 4*s.* in the pound on land; and what greater authority would it acquire were the present redeemed? If the whole were to be redeemed, the only thing necessary to be provided, as expressly as any legislative provision can guard, is, that, if ever a new land-tax is imposed, it shall not be imposed upon those who have redeemed in any different proportion from that on those who have not redeemed. It would be necessary to provide, that the amount of what may have been redeemed shall be deducted from any new impost."

The concluding words of Mr. Pitt, which we have printed in italics, are important, and contain an answer to the objection which we have sometimes heard stated, that the redemption of the land-tax precludes all future and further interference with that property which has been subjected to its operation. Mr. Miller goes on to explain the cause of the inequality:—

"When it is borne in mind that the sums assessed for land-tax are for the most part the same as those which were assessed two centuries ago, it requires little further explanation to account for the great inequalities of the assessments for this tax throughout the country. The cities of London and Westminster are nearly in the same condition, with regard to the number of buildings within them, as when the tax was assessed under the statute of William & Mary; but Russell and Tavistock Squares, and the extensive and now populous district of Marylebone, were, even in the year 1798, fields and swamps, while Brighton and Hastings were mere fishing towns; and even Liverpool and Manchester were only beginning to rise into importance. Yet the amount of land-tax assessed under the act of 1798 upon the city of Westminster was and still is 63,092*l.*, and upon the city of London 123,399*l.*; while that upon the whole county of Sussex (excepting a few of the Cinque Port towns, but including Brighton, Lewes, and Chichester) was and still is only 57,560*l.*; and the amount assessed upon the county of Lancaster, comprehending Liverpool, Manchester, and Preston, was and still is only 20,939*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* So, again, the amount of this tax assessed under the same act upon the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, and St. George-the-Martyr, which is assessed to the property-tax at the annual amount of 183,191*l.*, was and still is 9018*l.*; while that upon the parish of St. Pancras, which is assessed to the property-tax at the annual sum of 1,251,737*l.*, was and still is 1,776*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*; and that upon the parish of St. Marylebone, which is assessed to the property-tax at the annual sum of 1,132,324*l.*, was and still is 492*l.*"

The following is a statement of some of the most striking inequalities in the operation of the land-tax, made by the present chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, in his evidence before the Committee on Agricultural Distress in 1836, and quoted by Mr. Miller, (Preface, p. xi):—

"Mr. Garnet (the Registrar of Land-tax) has drawn out a statement, which, with the leave of the committee, I will read to them, shewing some of the most striking inequalities. The amount of the rate per pound on the rental for London proper is about 3*s.* 2½*d.* Then follows a statement of several parishes adjoining London, forming, in fact, a part of what is usually called London:—St. Clement's and St. Mary-le-Strand, 1*s.* 7½*d.*; the Duchy Liberty, 1*s.* 5½*d.*; St. Martin, 1*s.* 1*d.*; St. Margaret and St. John, 8½*d.*; St. Anne, 1*s.* 10*d.*; St. George, Hanover-square, 5½*d.*; St. James, 9½*d.*; St. Paul, Covent-garden, 3*s.*; St. Andrew, Holborn, and St. George, 1*s.* 3½*d.*; St. Pancras, 0½*d.*; Marylebone, under 0½*d.*,—I believe the whole amount levied on Marylebone is under 600*l.*, which has never been altered; Paddington, 1½*d.*; Kensington, 4*d.*; Chelsea, 2½*d.* Then we have, taken almost at random, some of the principal towns in England. We have taken Brighton, Liverpool, Worthing, and other places which have risen very much in population, and have taken some of the old decayed towns. Brighton, under 0½*d.*; Broadwater, including Worthing, 3½*d.*; Lewes, 2*s.* 3*d.*; Chichester, 9½*d.*; Rye, 3*s.* 11½*d.*; Hastings, 2½*d.*; Bath, including Walcot and Bathwick, 0½*d.*; Clifton, 0½*d.*; Cheltenham, 1½*d.*; Stockport, 1½*d.*; Macclesfield, 3½*d.*; Leeds and its suburbs, 3½*d.*; Sheffield, 1½*d.*; Liverpool, under 0½*d.* The circumstances of Liverpool, I believe, are these:—The quota unredeemed is 99*l.* and some odd shillings; the rental is the basis of the rating; the sum to be levied in the pound is something less than one-third of a farthing annually; and the consequence is, that a rate is made, I believe, every three years, of one farthing, and the expense is, probably, three or four times as much as the sum actually raised, because all the forms of assessing the land-tax, all the duplicates, all the payments into the Exchequer, must go on with as much regularity as if they were 100,000*l.* per year: therefore the Committee may easily conceive that the expense of levying that upon the inhabitants is three or four times as much as the sum paid into the Exchequer. Everton, Toxteth Park, and West Derby, 3*s.* 4*d.*; Manchester, including Ardwick, Cheetham, Chorlton Row, Hulme, and Salford, 1½*d.*; Preston, 0½*d.*"

Mr. Miller's work is divided into three chapters. Chapter 1 treats of assessments generally. Chapter 2, of the rights and remedies of persons unequally as-essed to the land-tax. Chapter 3, of the acts for redemption and purchase of the land-tax.

Chapter 1 is divided into six sections, the subjects of which are respectively:—"1. Of the acts for assessing and collecting the land-tax. 2. As to the powers, duties, and qualifications of the commissioners and other officers. 3. As to the mode in which the assessments are to be collected. 4. As to the enactments relating to particular subjects and to particular places. 5. As to the persons and subjects exempted from the tax. 6. As to Scotland."

Chapter 3 is divided into five sections, which are as follows:—"1. As to the parties entitled to redeem, and the mode of effecting redemptions. 2. As to the sale and mortgage of lands for the purpose of redemption. 3. As to the provisions in the Redemption Acts relating to contracts for redemption generally. 4. As to the redemption of land-tax on Crown lands, or lands within the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster. 5. As to sales and charges of lands in Scotland for the purposes of redemption."

We subjoin an important extract from the first section of the first chapter:—

"The first statute containing explicit directions for assessing and collecting land-tax in England and Wales, is the 4 Will. & M. c. 1, the provisions of which were for the most part embodied in acts of Parliament annually passed to continue the tax till the year 1798, when the stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, was passed, under which the land-tax has ever since been collected. By this act a sum of 1,989,673*l.* was directed to be raised in England and Wales, according to the several proportions at which each county, city, borough, or town was then assessed. These proportions are set forth in the 2nd section of the act, and the commissioners appointed by it were empowered to determine what part of the sum assessed upon each county should be charged upon each hundred, lathe, wapentake, rape, or other division within England, Wales, or Berwick-upon-Tweed; but, in settling such quota, the commissioners were to be governed by the assessments made in pursuance of the statute of Will. & M. c. 7.

"The subjects upon which the tax is directed to be levied, and the rate at which it was to be assessed, are as follows:—

Ready money, debts, goods, wares, merchandise, or other chattels, or personal estate, (except desperate debts, stock on land, household goods, and loans to his Majesty)†	} After the rate of 20 s. * for every 100 l.

* 2*s.* by the 4 Will. & M. c. 1, s. 2—i. e. 4*s.* in the pound on 6*l.*, the legal interest of 100*l.* at that time. In one of the enactments during the Commonwealth, preserved in Scobell's Collection, part 2, p. 400, the words are, "by an equal rate, wherein every 20*l.* in money, stock, or other personal estate shall bear the like charge as shall be laid on every 26*l.* yearly rent or yearly value of land." According to this, if 20*l.* yearly rent pay 4*s.*, 100*l.* of money or stock would pay 20*s.*

† "By the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 12, the duties on personal estate are repealed; and by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 9, s. 21, it is declared, that the duty on salaries, offices, or employments of profit, annuities, pensions, stipends, or other annual payments, shall not be charged upon any salaries, &c. which shall have been specially exempted from the payment of any aids or taxes by any act of Parliament; or where any such salaries, &c. shall, by any order of his Majesty in council, or by any warrant under his Majesty's royal sign-manual, or by any order of the Commissioners of the Treasury, have been directed to be paid net, or without deduction; or where the sums assessed on any such salaries, &c. shall, by like order of the Commissioners of the Treasury, have been directed to be repaid or reimbursed to the persons assessed out of the public revenue; it being also provided, that the authority for any such payment net, or repayment, shall be certified by some principal

"Public offices or employments of profit, (excepting military officers of the army or navy), salaries, gratuities, bounty-money, rewards, fees, profits, perquisites or advantages, annuities, pensions, stipends, or other yearly payments, either out of the receipt of the Exchequer, or out of any branch of the revenue of the Crown"

After the rate of 4s. in the pound per annum on the annual amount.

"Manors, messuages, lands, quarries, mines, iron-mills, furnaces, and other iron-works, salt-springs and salt-works, alum-mines and works, parks, chases, warrens, woods, underwood, coppices, fishings, tithes, tolls, annuities and other yearly profits, and all other hereditaments"

To be assessed, with as much equality and indifference as possible, by a pound rate, not exceeding 4s. in the pound, owner of land subject to a fee-farm rent, or other annual rent or payment, being entitled to make a proportionate reduction for such pound rate, (ss. 4, 5)."

In saying that the provisions of the 4 Will. & M. c. 1, "were for the most part embodied in acts of Parliament annually passed to continue the tax till the year 1798," Mr. Miller does not take any notice of the fact, that an alteration of most momentous, of vital importance, was made five years after the passing of the act 4 Will. & M. c. 1. The following statutes, viz. the 1 Will. & M. sess. 1, c. 20; the 1 Will. & M. sess. 2, c. 1; the 1 Will. & M. sess. 2, c. 5; the 4 Will. & M. c. 1; the 5 Will. & M. c. 1; the 6 & 7 Will. & M. c. 3; the 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 5; and the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 6, 24, imposed a bona fide tax on real property—a real, not a nominal, land-tax—at the rate of 4s. in the pound, to be raised in each of those six years, on the full and true annual rental, at the time of assessing thereof, of all the real property in the kingdom. But by the stat. 9 Will. 3, c. 10, and all the subsequent statutes, called "Land-tax Acts," down to the 38 Geo. 3, c. 6, the frame and principle of the law were totally changed. A certain specified sum was then directed to be raised by a certain specified rate imposed on the personal property of the kingdom; and it was only any residue or deficiency that there might be which was to be made up from the pound-rate ordered to be levied upon the lands, tenements, &c. of the kingdom. It is therefore quite a mistake to say, as has been sometimes said, that, in levying the land-tax, the principle of the stat. 4 Will. & M. c. 1, is observed, the principle of that statute having been, to tax real property according to its full, true, actual value at the time of the assessment—that is, according to its full present value. The mistake, so far as it may be a mistake, of supposing that the principle and provisions of the stat. 4 Will. & M. c. 1, were preserved in the subsequent statutes, called Land-tax Acts, may probably have arisen from the circumstance, that the proportion in which the various counties, towns, and districts had contributed towards the assessment made under that act, was adopted by the Legislature as the proportion to be adopted in future assessments. There can be little doubt that the stat. 9 Will. 3, c. 10, of which all the subsequent statutes, by courtesy called Land-tax Acts, are merely copies, was skilfully framed for the purpose of protecting the land, and other real property, from officer in the department to which the office or employment belongs."

* As Mr. Miller has put this, it has a somewhat unusual and, to modern notions, incongruous appearance. The words of the act are, "such military officers who are or shall be in muster by the muster master-general of the army, or in pay in their Majesties' army or navy in respect of such offices, only excepted." (4 Will. & M. c. 1, s. 3).

paying a tax in proportion to the growing profit thereof. Whatever it may have brought to others, in the way of honour and profit, the act—we mean the 9 Will. 3, c. 10—certainly does credit to the skill and astuteness of its draftsman.

In regard to the remedies of persons unequally assessed to the land-tax, Mr. Miller's work will be found extremely useful and important. It has been generally supposed that assessments, when once returned, cannot be altered. Mr. Miller, however, states, in his Preface, and also in a note, at p. 28, that he is enabled to bear testimony to the practical working of the power of appeal given by the act 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, having himself succeeded, in several instances, in obtaining important reductions in the assessments. He in particular specifies one case, where the owner of nearly the whole property in a township was paying 1s. 3d. in the pound for land-tax, while the owners of property in other townships in the same division were paying only 5d., and in some cases 2d., in the pound. In this case he obtained relief to the extent of 200*l.* a year.

LONDON, MARCH 2, 1850.

THE debate on Mr. Fitzroy's motion (on the 26th February) to extend the jurisdiction of the county courts to 50*l.* is at least amusing, as shewing the readiness with which men will adopt, in support of their own views, a style of argument which, in the mouths of their opponents, they have long been accustomed to treat with unbounded contempt. As this is not a political journal, we are neither disposed nor at liberty to discuss the relative merits of different political creeds, whether the subject-matter to which they are applied be law or general government; but we are at liberty to take cognisance of the fact, that there are Conservatives, and that there are Whigs and Liberals; also that there is a Conservative style of argumentation, and a Whig and Liberal style of argumentation. Now, if the arguments used by the learned Attorney-General on this debate had emanated from a gentleman of the Conservative persuasion, they would in no degree have produced any feeling of surprise; they were of the true Conservative complexion. Tarry yet awhile. This was the sum and substance of them—we had not yet experience enough of the working of the county courts. "The cases stated," said the learned member, "by the honourable gentleman would be equally applicable to 51*l.* or 52*l.* as to 30*l.* or 40*l.* He was quite aware that a person who advocated the entire abolition of the superior courts, and the transference of all the business to the local courts, might bring forward those cases in support of his arguments; but those who thought that there should be some limit to the jurisdiction could hardly avail themselves of them. The honourable gentleman stated that there was no reason why the sum of 20*l.* had been taken. There was, however, the strongest possible reason for fixing on that sum. 20*l.* was the sum within which the Legislature had laid it down that a party could not be arrested, and it was the sum which the superior courts had deemed to be of so insignificant an amount as to be unworthy of expensive litigation. Nor had the experiment of the county courts been properly tried. It had only been in operation for two or three years; working well, he agreed, and giving great satisfaction hitherto for the collection of small debts; but what effect it would have for the encouragement of credit, and the improvidently incurring of debts, was a question which they had not yet had the means of ascertaining. It was, he asserted, a mere experiment, which had not been properly investigated, and the honourable gentleman had not the fullest means of ascertaining how an experiment of this description acted. The honourable gentleman had not correctly represented his views with respect to an appeal. What he said on a former occasion, and repeated now, was, that if they gave no appeal in the higher amounts, he apprehended the court would not work satisfactorily, because there would be no check upon the judge—there would be no Bar to interpose—no Press to publish the proceedings. Men swore in their own cases under the most exciting influences; and though the custom might work well in small amounts, yet he considered that it would be dangerous in large ones, on account of the great temptation; and he might state, as the result of his own professional experience, that in the case of arbitrations, where the arbitrator had the power to examine the parties, he never availed himself of it unless he were driven to it by the necessities of the case, so great was the temptation. If they gave an appeal in matters below 20*l.*, they destroy the court altogether; and if above 20*l.*, they dissatisfied the bulk of the suitors, who, having actions under that sum, complained that, whereas their richer neighbours were allowed an appeal, no such privilege was extended to them. Moreover, every reversal would be jealously watched by the smaller suitors, and would be magnified into a proof of the incompetence of the judge; in fact, by giving an appeal, they shook the confidence of the public altogether in the court."

VOL. XIV.

Now, if all this had proceeded from a leading Conservative, it would have been intelligible; coming from a Whig Attorney-General, it sounds at least strange. But let us see what there is in it as applied to the particular proposal for extending the jurisdiction of the county courts. Obviously nothing; because the experience we have had of the working of the county courts is of their working with a jurisdiction of 20*l.*, from which, of course, little or nothing in the way of specific conclusion can be deduced as to the mode in which they would work with a jurisdiction of 50*l.* The argument amounts to no more than this—we must not try a jurisdiction of 50*l.*, because we do not exactly know how a jurisdiction of 20*l.* works; as though one should say, we must not try how the navy can fight, because we do not yet know how the army fights.

The real question is, whether the reasons on which the public demand for, and the fitness of, a county court jurisdiction of 20*l.* was based, do not apply equally to a 50*l.* jurisdiction. Now, what were those reasons? They were simply, first, that demands of 20*l.* would not bear the expense of litigation conducted on the system of procedure proper to the superior courts; secondly, that such demands would not bear either the expense or the inconvenience of the suitors being removed, for the purpose of determining them, to any distance from their ordinary place of abode. These are reasons which apply with just as much force to demands for 50*l.* (perhaps one might even go higher) as to demands for 20*l.* For it is matter of the commonest experience, that it is scarcely possible for any contested action to be tried in the superior courts without the extra costs on either side making a considerable inroad into the half of 50*l.*, so that whoever wins the action and the costs, is still sure to lose a very large portion of his right. That this must be so is obvious, if it be recollected that the superior courts cannot be set in motion without formal pleadings, which must be prepared by educated attorneys, and, in most cases, settled by special pleaders; nor without evidence being prepared consistently with those pleadings, to do which requires again the services of the educated attorney, the pleader, and perhaps also of junior counsel. Lastly, that, when all is prepared for trial, the trial must be conducted by counsel. That all this is a proper and necessary course, when considerable sums or very important rights are at stake, is not denied; but it cannot, in the very nature of things, be obtained except at a costly outlay.

The difficulties that are made in reference to extending the jurisdiction of county courts, as to appeals and the attendance of a Bar, are purely imaginary. A competent Bar will be procured to attend wherever the interests of the parties are of sufficient magnitude, and the solution of their differences of sufficient difficulty, to make it worth their while to incur the expense of preparing their case with a view to engage counsel, and of retaining counsel. With regard to giving a right of appeal, nothing is easier. Let the right of appeal be given on a case to be stated by the Court, and be accompanied with a liability to deposit a sum to be fixed upon, and which should be sufficient to pay for moderate costs for the party appealed against, if his order should be supported, and be returned if the appeal succeeds; and there would be no great danger of too frequent or of oppressive appeals.

We shall not conclude without asking, as we have done over and over again, why the public, enjoying a common-law county court jurisdiction, is not also to have such an equity jurisdiction? Why, while proposing to extend the jurisdiction of the county courts to 50*l.* for actions, does not Mr. Fitzroy introduce in his bill clauses for giving to the county courts an equitable jurisdiction, as to cases where the subject-matter does not exceed in value, say 150*l.* or 200*l.*? For such cases no simplification of the procedure of the High Court of Chancery can ever adapt it. And yet there are, among the humbler classes, thousands upon thousands of such cases which require equitable adjudication, and for which, adjudication in the county courts would be, at least, better than none.

JOHN KNOWLES, Secretary.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE, A. D. 1720.—Incorporated by Charter of his Majesty George the First.—CHIEF OFFICE, in the ROYAL EXCHANGE. Branch Office, No. 28, FLEET MALL.

LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES may be effected on the most advantageous terms with this Corporation, which has transacted business in all departments during a period exceeding a Century and a Quarter, and affords unquestionable Security by its Capital Stock.

The reversionary BONUS declared on British Life Policies effected on the system of participation in profits has amounted on an average to rather more than 2½ per Cent. per Annum on the Sum assured, or 40 per Cent. on the amount of Premium paid.

Equivalent reductions have been made in the Annual Premiums payable by those of the Assured who desired that their share of profit should be so applied.

The position and character so long maintained by the Corporation afford a sufficient guarantee that this Bonus has been declared out of Surplus actually realised, and not by anticipating future Profits.

Policies are granted for sums payable to the Assured on their attaining any specified age, or to their representatives in case of their premature death.

Persons assured with this chartered Corporation are exempt from the Liabilities of Partnership.

The practice of promptly deciding upon proposals, of registering and acknowledging notices of assignments, and giving information as to prior notices, is important to Members of the Legal Profession: and the granting Assurances to the extent of 10,000*l.* on a Life saves trouble to Clients as well as Solicitors, by obviating the necessity of appearance and examination at numerous offices.

The usual Commission is allowed to Solicitors, on introduction of Life Assurances, and is annually reserved for the same parties, notwithstanding the possible payment of subsequent Premiums through different Members of the Profession.

ALEX. GREEN, Secretary.

LONDON, MARCH 9, 1850.

IN completing our review of recent decisions relating to the liabilities of committeemen of railway companies*, the case of Ashpittel v. Lercombe (19 L. J., Ex., 82) next demands our notice. This was an action for money had and received, by an allottee, (who had agreed to accept the shares subject to the provisions of the subscribers' agreement), against a member of the committee of management, for the recovery of a deposit paid by the plaintiff, and now claimed by him on the ground that the scheme had proved abortive. No question was raised as to the defendant being the proper party to be sued, if the action could be maintained against any one, as the money was paid into a bank to the account of the managing committee; but it was contended, first, that the scheme could not be said to have proved abortive, so as to give the plaintiff any right of action; and, secondly, that he had acquiesced in the application of the deposits to the payment of preliminary expenses, the subscribers' agreement providing for such application. Upon the first objection, it was held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that the onus probandi as to the abortiveness of the scheme lay upon the plaintiff; and as he had proved that he had paid his money for shares in a concern which was abandoned before it was carried into execution, he was entitled to recover it as money received to his use, the consideration having failed, unless he was shewn by the defendant (on whom the onus probandi in this respect lay) to have acquiesced in the application of the money which the directors made. The only evidence of such acquiescence (if any) was contained in the letters of application and allotment, and the subscribers' agreement; but the Court held, that although the money, if applied according to the terms of the contract on which it had been paid, could not be recovered, and although in this case the subscribers' agreement did purport to authorise the expenditure of the deposits, yet it did not appear that when the plaintiff applied for shares he knew of this specific agreement, nor was it shewn even to have existed at that time; and further, that although he would have been bound by the terms of such a deed as he might have been properly called upon to subscribe, and which the directors gave him an opportunity of executing, yet in this case the deed produced was an improper one, inasmuch as it invested the directors with a larger power than the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, authorises them to assume, and purported to enable them to expend the deposits in the exercise of such excessive power.

It was also held, that a resolution, contained in a minute-book of the company, which, as forming part of the proceedings of the directors, had been handed by the defendant to a committee of inquiry appointed on the winding-up of the company, was thereby sufficiently recognised by him, to make it admissible as evidence against him, without calling the secretary, who had entered the resolution. The letters of a secretary to a railway company, however, not shewn to have been written by the authority of a committeeman, or to have been recognised by him, are not, in general, evidence against him. (See Burnside v. Dayrell, 3 Exch. 224; Rennie v. Wynn, 19 L. J., Ex., 2).

The several cases reported under the title of Baily v. Macaulay (14 Jur., part 1, p. 80) are important, as defining, in clear terms, the responsibility of committeemen to creditors of the company, and also as containing a full review, and to a great extent a recognition by the Court of Queen's Bench, of the numerous decisions given by the Court of Exchequer on this subject. It would be tedious and unprofitable to enter into the special facts of these actions; but the following principles, extracted from the judgments delivered in them, are well worthy of attention:—

* See former article on this subject, ante, p. 57.

1. The proper question for the jury in such actions is, whether the defendant, either personally or by his authorised agent, entered into the contract sued upon.

2. No liability is incurred by merely becoming a provisional committeeman; but the consent to do so may be important, if it be also shewn that he knew of, and authorised, the incurring of expenses necessary to the formation of the company, and the goods, &c. sued for were so necessary.

3. A person, by acting on a provisional committee, may authorise an agent to contract on his credit, without giving, or intending to give, any direct authority to that effect.

4. A previous authority for this purpose may be inferred from subsequent conduct or admissions of the defendant; but they must appear to have been made from a consciousness of legal personal liability to the plaintiff in respect of the particular demand, and not merely from a desire to prevent litigation, or from a misconception of the law as to the liability of provisional committeemen, simply as such.

5. If it appear that the plaintiff looked only to the deposits for payment, he has no cause of action against individual committeemen.

WE call the attention of our equity readers to two cases reported in the last number of THE JURIST, (Stevens v. Keating, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 157, and Sargrove v. Mayhew, Id. 158), both interesting, as exhibiting the marked disposition of Courts of equity, at this day, to model the rules of pleading and practice upon the doctrines of common sense, when they are not inextricably settled by authority upon opposite principles. The first case addresses itself to the question, what are, in a Chancery suit, costs in the cause; and, in particular, when the costs of an interlocutory proceeding, such as the costs of a motion for an injunction, or for any other order obtainable on motion, are costs in the cause. In two cases, Finden v. Stephens, (16 Sim. 40), and the principal case, the Vice-Chancellor of England had disallowed the defendant's costs of a motion unsuccessfully resisted by him, although the bill was ultimately dismissed, with costs; and his Honor appears to have done so on the authority of the first of Sir John Leach's famous canons as to costs, that "the party making a successful motion is entitled to his costs, but the party opposing it is not entitled to his costs as costs in the cause." Now, it is difficult to imagine a rule more repugnant to common sense and common justice, than that a party who had no right to sustain, and therefore never ought to have filed a bill, should be entitled to put the defendant to expense, because, in some interlocutory proceeding, founded on that very bill, he had succeeded. It may be quite true, that, in such interlocutory proceeding, it may have been right for the Court to make the order asked for by the plaintiff;

but it is quite a different thing to say that the defendant should be made to bear any of the expense of that incidental contention, which never ought to have taken place at all, because the principal claim was ill-founded, and never ought to have been brought forward. As, for instance, in the case of a claim by a company to carry a railway or a canal through a particular property, and a bill filed to restrain the company from so doing, it may be quite right, pending the trial of the right, to protect the owner of the land against an act, the result of which might be irremediable mischief, if he turns out to be in the right; but if his bill is ultimately dismissed, which would shew that he never had any claim to stop the company, does it not militate against common sense to say, not only that they are to bear having been stopped, without any sustainable claim to stop them, but that they are to bear the expense of resisting such unsustainable claim?

The Lord Chancellor has, in the case of Stevens v. Keating, decided that the rule of practice is according to the rule of common sense, and that when a bill is dismissed, with costs, costs in the cause include the costs of the defendant's unsuccessful resistance to a motion for an injunction, on the ground that, in such a case, the assumption of right, on which the injunction was obtained, turning out ultimately to be unfounded, the injunction was itself improperly obtained.

In the case next referred to, (Sargrove v. Mayhew), the Lord Chancellor has also overturned a refinement inaccurately supposed to be law. In that case the question was, whether, after a bill had been filed, one of the defendants becoming insolvent, the objection that his estate was no longer vested in him, but in his assignee, could be taken by plea, or whether it ought not to be taken by answer. The objection to the plea seems to have been, that it was a plea of a defect which did not exist at the time of the institution of the suit, and that such a plea cannot be sustained; in effect, that a plea must be a defence arising out of a fact existing at the time when the bill was filed. Now, what there is in the nature of a plea to justify this refinement, is certainly very puzzling. A plea is simply a short answer, stating one or two distinct facts, which, if true, render it impossible for the plaintiff to have relief, in the existing state of the record, and thereby render it quite immaterial, and therefore unnecessary, to state whether any of the allegations of the bill are true or not. In Lord Redesdale's description of a plea, (5th ed., p. 257; 4th ed., p. 218), there is not one word to shew that a plea must be of matter existing at the date of the bill, but simply to shew that it is a special answer, setting up some fact which reduces the cause, or part of it, to a single point. "A demurrer," he says, "has been mentioned to be the proper mode of defence to a bill when any objection to it is apparent on the bill itself, either from matter contained in it, or from defect in its frame, or in the case made by it. When an objection to a bill is not apparent on the bill itself, if the defendant means to take advantage of it, he ought to shew to the Court the matter which creates the objection, either by answer or by plea, which has been described as a special answer, shewing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed, delayed, or barred. The defence proper for a plea is such as reduces the cause, or some part of it, to a single point, and from thence creates a bar to the suit, or to the part to which the plea applies."

Now, as a matter of common sense, of what possible consequence can it be whether the matter pleaded in bar happened before or after the filing of the bill? The substantial difficulty is, that some matter does exist, which makes it impossible for the Court to give the relief asked by the plaintiff in the suit, constituted as it is. That it requires to be altered by supplemental bill, is no rational answer to the objection being taken by plea, any more than it would be to its being taken by answer; and accordingly, notwithstanding the case of De Minckswige v. Udney, (16 Ves. 466), in which the very point appears to have occurred, the Lord Chancellor has held that a plea of the insolvency of a co-defendant, happening since the filing of the bill, is a good plea.

ORDER OF COURT.

Saturday, February 23, 1850.

The Right Honourable CHARLES CHRISTOPHER LORD COTTENHAM, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, doth hereby order and direct in manner following, that is to say:—

That all causes required to be heard before the Lord Chancellor, or one of the Vice-Chancellors, shall, on and after the 1st day of March next, be set down for hearing by the Registrars, upon production to them of the certificate of the proper officer that the same is in a fit state to be set down for hearing, without any fiat, order, or direction from the Lord Chancellor for that purpose.

That on and after the said 1st day of March next, all causes for further directions, or on equity reserved after a trial at law shall have been had, or the certificate of a Court of law shall have been obtained, in pursuance of a decree or order pronounced by the Lord Chancellor, or one of the Vice-Chancellors, and all pleas, demurrers, exceptions and objections for want of parties required to be heard before the Lord Chancellor, or one of the Vice-Chancellors, shall be set down by the Registrars for hearing on orders drawn up by them upon petition to the Lord Chancellor, left with the Registrar, without any fiat or direction from the Lord Chancellor.

That in lieu and instead of the fees heretofore receivable by the Lord Chancellor's principal secretary on his own account, and on account of the gentlemen of the chamber, or of any other officer of the Court of Chancery, and paid at the office of the said principal secretary, he shall receive and take only the fees set out in the schedule hereto, except as to all petitions presented previous to the said 1st day of March next, the Court fees upon which are to be paid as heretofore.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE, A. D. 1720.—Incorporated by Charter of his Majesty George the First.—CHIEF OFFICE, in the ROYAL EXCHANGE. Branch Office, No. 29, PAUL MALL.

LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES may be effected on the most advantageous terms with this Corporation, which has transacted business in all departments during a period exceeding a Century and a Quarter, and affords unquestionable Security by its Capital Stock.

The reversionary BONUS declared on British Life Policies effected on the system of participation in profits has amounted on an average to rather more than 21. per Cent. per Annum on the Sum assured, or 461. per Cent. on the amount of Premium paid.

Equivalent reductions have been made in the Annual Premiums payable by those of the Assured who desired that their share of profit should be so applied.

The position and character so long maintained by the Corporation afford a sufficient guarantee that this Bonus has been declared out of Surplus actually realised, and not by anticipating future Profits.

Policies are granted for sums payable to the Assured on their attaining any specified age, or to their representatives in case of their premature death.

LONDON, MARCH 16, 1850.

THE recent decision of Gorham's case, in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, appears to have given tolerably general satisfaction—a circumstance arising out of this, that, upon the doctrinal question so much discussed in it, it does not in effect, nor does it profess to give, any positive opinion. All that it does is—not professing to say either what is or what is not the doctrine of the Church of England—to say that Mr. Gorham's doctrine is not so clearly out of the pale of the Church's doctrine as to render him unfit to be charged with a cure of souls. The judgment, in reality, proceeds upon the legal effect of usage, founding the right of Mr. Gorham to institution upon the circumstance, that, it being shewn that his doctrine has been publicly held for a lengthened period by numerous Churchmen of distinguished reputation, who, while holding such doctrine, have also held clerical preferment without challenge, it must be taken to be established, that, whether such doctrine is the precise doctrine of the Church or not, usage has conferred upon it a legal immunity, so that it shall not affect its holders with clerical incapacity.

The anxious care with which the Judicial Committee has avoided deciding the doctrinal question, has added to the impression previously existing, to some extent, in the public mind, that there is something strange in the notion of an exclusively lay tribunal deciding, even incidentally, upon questions of religious doctrine. For it has been thought, that the evasion of the religious question by the Judicial Committee may have proceeded from a consciousness in that tribunal of its unfitness for the investigation of the question.

We confess ourselves unable to understand on what grounds the suggestion, that it is improper for a lay tribunal to deal with such cases as Gorham's case, can be supported; for in that case the question was not one simply of doctrine. It was a case in which were involved the rights of property, as well of the patron of the living as of his presentee; the former of whom was clearly entitled to present, and the latter to be instituted, without which he could not proceed to the possession of the temporalities of his office, unless clerical unfitness or some other lawful impediment could be shewn.

VOL. XIV.

To contend, therefore, that, in such a case, it would be unfit that lay judges should exercise jurisdiction, uncontrolled by ecclesiastical persons having judicial authority, would be to contend, that, to some extent, the rights of property of the Queen's subjects ought to be submitted to the decision of the Church—a doctrine which, we apprehend, few would venture in terms to propound.

It is true, that, in deciding upon the civil right of the party in such cases as that referred to, it is requisite for the Judicial Committee to inquire, and it may be necessary for it to express a distinct opinion upon, what the doctrine of the Church is; but, in doing that, the Judicial Committee would neither in point of form nor in substance decide the question of doctrine. It would ascertain as a fact, to the best of its ability, and by the aid of learned witnesses, the doctrine of the Church, just as it would, in dealing with civil rights depending on a question of foreign law, ascertain the foreign law as a fact; but it would no more in the one case decide the question of doctrine, than it would in the other the question of foreign law. The only question on which its decision would be binding, as law, would be the particular question of civil right before it. As to the question of doctrine, its opinion would be of no authority, and would not pretend to be authority; it would be the finding of a given fact at a given time, and would neither be, nor pretend to be, anything more. The rights and interests, then, of the Church cannot be, in principle, at all injured by such questions being dealt with by lay tribunals; nor is it likely that they should be injured in practice, seeing that lay tribunals will necessarily decide such questions upon consultation and advice of those learned in spiritual matters.

But whatever may be the soundness or unsoundness of the idea, that lay tribunals ought not to decide upon questions of Church doctrine, it is, at any rate, quite a new idea, wholly repugnant to the common law of the country, the Courts of law having had jurisdiction in such matters for time out of mind; since it has always been the law, that if the patron of a living presents, and the bishop refuses his presentee, the patron might bring an action against the bishop; and if the reason alleged for refusal were heresy, the fact would be tried by a jury; and if the fact were proved, and the sufficiency of it disputed, the Court of law would decide upon the sufficiency. This point is so clear that we should not trouble our learned readers with a reference to any authority; but, as the nature of the subject may cause these observations to be read by the unlearned, we will refer them to 1 Bl. Com. c. 11, p. 389, and the authority there cited, viz. 2 Coke's Inst. 632, in which, if they will take the trouble to examine it, they will find the law to be as we have stated it.

Suggestions for a Reform of Special Pleading. By THOMAS JONES, Esq., Barrister at Law.

[Benning & Co. 1850.]

A Letter to Sir John Jervis on Special Pleading. By WILLIAM CORRIE, Esq., Barrister at Law.

[Benning & Co. 1850.]

Proctors, or Pleadors? A Letter to the Attorney-General; with practical Suggestions for the Amendment of Special Pleading. By HENRY BULLAR, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, Special Pleader. [Benning & Co. 1850.]

The administration of justice consists in applying rules of law to a given state of facts brought before a legal tribunal for its decision. It is obvious that such facts should be presented in an intelligible and certain form, so that the contending parties, aware of the case which they are called upon to meet, may shape their evidence accordingly, and that the Court may be informed of the questions of fact and of law which it is their duty to determine. A desire for the attainment of these objects has led to the formation of the science called Special Pleading—a science which, moulded by the wisdom, and sometimes the folly, of successive ages, has undergone the transitions common to human institutions; at first simple and homely; then refined, complicated, and in some respects cumbersome; now reformed, now altered without being reformed, now praised, now censured.

With all its imperfections, special pleading is allowed, by those most intimately acquainted with its operation, to be a valuable invention, having its special uses, and deserving amendment rather than destruction. There is, however, a strong and growing opinion, not only among the public, but also among the legal profession, and one in which we fully concur, that such amendment is required in order to prevent the sacrifice of substance to form, and of the merits of a case to its technicalities.

This is a notion of ancient date, and entertained by men of high authority. "When I diligently consider," says Sir Edward Coke, "the course of our books of years and terms from the beginning of the reign of Edward III, I observe that more jangling and questions grow upon the matter of pleading and exceptions to form than upon the matter itself, and infinite causes lost or delayed for want of good pleading." (Co. Litt. 303. a.)* Sir Matthew Hale considered, that in the time of Edward IV the judges and pleaders had already become "somewhat too curious," and that the science of special pleading had degenerated from its primitive simplicity†; "which," he adds, "how these later times have improved, the length of the pleadings, the many and unnecessary repetitions, the many miscarriages of causes upon small and trivial niceties in pleading, have too much witnessed." (Hist. C. L. 173, 176). The late John William Smith thought the excessive technicality of special pleading a serious evil, and a great obstacle to the proper administration of justice. That the errors for which a party cannot be responsible, and which are totally beside the real merit of his case, should decide upon his success or failure, substantially from the expense of amendment in almost all cases, and actually in a great many, appeared to him inconsistent with the increasing exigencies of the age, and the general progress of society. (See his memoir in 6 Law Mag., N.S.) Even Mr. Serjt. Stephen, after an able exposition of the advantages attending our system, adds, "The excessive subtlety and needless precision by which some parts of it are characterized often expose suitors to the necessity of expensive amendments, and sometimes occasion an absolute failure of justice upon points of mere form." (Principles of Pleading, 484).

There is no doubt that these evils have been increased rather than diminished in modern times, by the new rules restricting the use of several counts and pleas, and requiring the defence to be expanded on the record,

* The following will give a specimen of the technical strictness required in criminal pleading as far back as the reign of Edward I:—"In an appeal of murder, temp. 3 & 4 Edw. 1, the indictment set forth the abutments of the place where the man was murdered, and alleged that the prisoner 'came feloniously, as a felon of our lord the Earl of Chester, against the peace of our lord the earl, and the dignity of his sword, and shot with a certain bow, cord, and arrow, &c.; that the wood of the arrow was of the length of twenty-four inches of a man, and the fledge was feathered with the feather of a goose, sewn up and bound with thread and silk of the value of one farthing,' &c. The prisoner, having stood mute twice, and having been sentenced to peine forte et dure, at length excepted to the indictment, that David, the prosecutor, had not mentioned the bigness of the fledge, nor the colour of the feathers thereof. 'Therefore it is considered that the aforesaid John go quit, and the same David, for false appeal, be committed to prison.' (See the interesting lecture lately delivered at Chester by W. H. Black, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Records, reported in the Journal of the British Archaeological Association for October, 1849, p. 187).

† We have a specimen of this simplicity during the eleventh century, in the Assizes de Jerusalem, c. 27:—"Qui a conseil et se veut clamer d'ome ou de feme, qui est present en la Court, il doit faire dire par son conseil au seigneur, si que celui de qui il se clame ou veant clamer, l'oye, Sire tel se clame a vous de tel chose et en veant avoir droit par vous et par la Court; et le nome, et die de quoi il se clame, et as plus briefes paroles qui il pora, face son clame." And in the juridical system of the Germans during the middle ages we are informed—"Aderant in iudicio advocati, qui causas litigantium nuda simplici oratione, sine ullo verborum circuito, tractare jubebantur." (Hachenberg. Germ. Med. 97; Stephen on Pleading, Appendix, xiv, xvi).

whereby it is rendered more vulnerable to the pleader's attack. We consider these rules to be beneficial in their general operation, but they would be of much greater service if formal objections were less fatal, and if the judges were more liberal in the exercise of their powers of amendment at Nisi Prius.

The three pamphlets placed at the head of this article are indicative of the professional feeling in favour of rendering pleadings less technical, and as such we give them welcome. Mr. Corrie appears to us to be too sweeping in the changes he would propose, and his pamphlet bears evident marks of haste and carelessness, both in its statements and suggestions. Thus he tells us, "that it is a ground for arresting judgment if general 'damages are given on a declaration containing good 'and bad counts,' (p. 8); but only a venire de novo would be granted, unless there was a misjoinder of counts. In another place he speaks of the plaintiff being nonsuited because "for that" has been used instead of "for that whereas," which, in fact, is no objection whatever, even on special demurrer; and if "for that whereas" be used instead of "for that," it can be taken advantage of only by special demurrer, and not as a ground of nonsuit. The pamphlet by Mr. Jones seems to have been much better considered; it is an able and temperate exposition of the evils attending the present system, and of the advantages which would accrue from his proposed alterations. Mr. Bullar's letter is a clever and forcible answer to Mr. Corrie, shewing that that gentleman has carried his theory too far, but at the same time offering practical suggestions for reform where it is most needed, and may be most advantageously effected. Mr. Jones's and Mr. Bullar's pamphlets are directed against the abuses, that by Mr. Corrie against even the uses, of special pleading. The first-named author would abolish special demurrers; the second would diminish the temptation to resort to them. Mr. Corrie says, "I have plans to suggest which 'involve a destruction and cutting up of the whole system, root and branch; no mere lopping off the excrescences,' (p. 22). His plan is, that an officer of the Court should settle the issue between the parties—a proposal to which numerous objections may be suggested: for instance, its adoption would cause the judgment to be arrested or reversed for defects, which might be and often are pointed out at an earlier stage by a general demurrer; and we think that there is much advantage in leaving the parties to settle the issues for themselves. Mr. Bullar's pamphlet triumphantly answers this proposition.

We have long been of opinion that special demurrers should be altogether abolished, but we think that some substitute should be adopted for the sake of form, certainty, and brevity in pleadings. The cheapest and most expeditious course would probably be to extend the practice which now prevails, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 11, with regard to misnomers, to other formal defects, and to require a summons to be taken out within a certain time (say two days) for the amendment of the pleading, at the costs of the other party, which costs might be in the discretion of the judge. We think also it would be advisable to insist upon even substantial objections being taken by general demurrer in those stages of the pleadings where they occur, (leave being always given, after argument, to amend on payment of costs), and thus motions in arrest of judgment, for judgment non obstante veredicto, and in many cases writs of error, would be prevented. It would appear, also, only to be just to allow the plaintiff, if he have several answers to one plea, to avail himself of them by several replications, instead of confining him, as at present, to one replication to one plea. A more liberal use of the replication de injuriâ would probably be beneficial. Such remedies as these, which might be easily effected by a rule of all the common law courts, would, we believe, save the great delay, expense, and injustice now fairly charged upon special pleading, or rather its abuses, and would at the same time preserve much of that formal accuracy which is essential to every science.

The Legislature of the State of New York have set us an example in this matter, by having lately abolished all forms of actions but one, and requiring the pleadings therein to be in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. Special demurrers are disallowed, and general replications are permitted. (See 13 Jur., part 2, p. 225).

By recent intelligence from India, we learn that the Supreme Court of Calcutta has materially simplified pleading, and reduced the number of actions to four*.

If justice were rendered as cheap, as expeditious, and as certain as it might be, by substantial reforms in the procedure of our Courts, we feel assured that its administration would be much more safely and advantageously intrusted to our superior jurisdictions (at all events in cases involving an amount beyond 20*l.*) than to the numerous tribunals with which we are threatened throughout the country.

LONDON, MARCH 23, 1850.

In a pamphlet lately published by a well-known writer on legal reforms* are to be found some rather curious statistical statements respecting the effect on the pockets of suitors, of a judge yielding to the anxiety of solicitors to postpone the hearing of causes on account of the absence of their leading counsel. Whether, as a matter of good taste, it is expedient or decent publicly to attack a judge, not, while he is doing wrong, for the purpose of making him do right, but for the purpose of reminding him how very wrong he has been, after he has ceased to do the wrong, and publicly announced his intention in future to do right, is a question upon which we shall not here enter. The inclination of our own opinion would have been against this mode of proceeding. But it is a matter of feeling and taste, on which men may perhaps reasonably differ, and at any rate do, in fact, very widely differ; and as evidence of such difference, to use the language of a pleader, we refer to the publication of the pamphlet in question.

If, however, the good taste of the learned writer's pamphlet is materially questionable, his facts are, at any rate, unquestionably material. One we select as particularly striking:—"A testator's property consisted chiefly of some leasehold houses at Manchester. These were bequeathed specially to a class, all infants. His general personal estate was small, and it was doubtful whether there was any disposition of the residue. On behalf of the infants it was alleged, that there was such a disposition, and in their favour. The next of kin contended for an intestacy. There was a direction that the sum of 150*l.* should be laid out in the purchase of a Government annuity for an old female servant. The testator had been bed-ridden for many years, and she had attended him with great care. There was an administration suit, the infant class being the plaintiffs, and the executors and next of kin the defendants. At the beginning of the year 1847 (there having been certain preliminary inquiries) you pronounced the decree, and late in the same year you made an order upon exceptions (by a bond creditor) to a separate report of the Master. But the decree was not pronounced, and the order upon the exceptions was not made without numerous delays, embracing many weeks, occasioned by the non-appearance, sometimes of the leading counsel of the plaintiffs, at other times of a leading counsel of the defendants. One day in the spring of 1848, the cause, being in your paper upon further directions, was called on, and ought to have been heard. The plaintiffs' leading counsel was, however, opening an appeal before the Lord Chancellor, and all your causes stood over. You left the court after a sitting which lasted less than a quarter of an hour. Motions and petitions occupied the succeeding week; and in that week, and before the cause came again before you, there was an abatement, by the death of one of the next of kin. The usual proceedings having been had, there was a revivor, and soon after you made the order upon further directions. The question of intestacy had fallen to the ground; the general personal estate barely liquidated the debts and costs. There was consequently nothing for the payment of the 150*l.* legacy; and it was a painful circumstance when, a benevolent individual examining the bills of costs, it was found there would not have been such deficiency had the junior counsel (the leading counsel not being in their places) been required to proceed. It was to this omission that items in the bills of costs, somewhat exceeding 150*l.*, owed their existence. The old female servant is in some union workhouse."

* A Letter to the Vice-Chancellor of England, &c. By C. Purton Cooper, Esq., a Benchet of Lincoln's-inn. Stevens & Norton. 1850.

The next is not much less material:—

"From the year 1827, when the late Mr. Michael Angelo Taylor first communicated with me upon Chancery reform, the statistics of the court have, as you are aware, always been for me a favourite inquiry. In an investigation of that kind, I sometime ago had occasion to ascertain the number of opposed motions coming before you upon the day set apart for that description of business, and the number of solicitors entitled to charge for attending the hearing of such motions. The average I procured was—as to the motions, 50; as to the solicitors, 150.

"Now, very recently, out of the five days assigned at the usual intervals to motions, three were wholly lost as regards motions of this species. The leading counsel never presented themselves; they were employed in Lincoln's-inn Hall. Consider the result. A solicitor's fee is 13*s.* 4*d.* for attending the hearing of a motion: 13*s.* 4*d.* \times 150 = 100*l.* Here, then, was a sum of 100*l.* thrown away. But this was the sum thrown away on one only of the days to which I allude. The sum thrown away on the three days was 300*l.*"

Now, there are few persons who would not have been at all times ready to admit, that to permit the public business to be postponed for the convenience of particular counsel, or more properly for the convenience of particular parties to a particular cause, was a pernicious practice; but then most men held it pernicious on those general and somewhat vague grounds of principle which admit of much argument, and are consequently easily overcome by a pertinacious adherence to a specific and practical proposition. Thus, when, on the one side, a learned judge is told, that, by suffering causes to stand over because the leading counsel are absent, he is wasting the public time, delaying suitors, checking the development of junior forensic talent, &c.; and on the other, he is assailed by the single, practical, unanswerable argument—"I have retained Mr. A. or Mr. B. as my leading counsel; in him only have I faith; and if I am forced to go to trial without him, I am personally, visibly, and practically injured;"—can there be a doubt to which side a less gentle-tempered judge than the one whose repented sins are the text on which Mr. Cooper lectures, would incline? Had that learned judge had his attention called long ago to the statistics now brought forward, there can be as little doubt that long ago that same gentleness of disposition, which made him seek the accommodation of individuals, by postponing causes and rising if his leading counsel were absent, would have made him refuse to do that which, in effect, caused an immediate and practical injury to others, much more than equivalent to the benefit conferred on the favoured counsel and suitor.

We rejoice as much as any one can at the resolution adopted by the learned Vice-Chancellor. We conceive, that independently of all other considerations—and they are many—it is most material to the purposes of justice that the course of proceeding in courts should be such as to train the junior Bar for future leaders; and for that purpose to foster in them, among others, the feeling of responsibility—a feeling which nothing tends more to repress than the certainty that they will never be called upon to act without their leaders. It is a most mistaken and mischievous notion, extensively prevalent among junior counsel, that it is no part of their business to be prepared to lead their case. No doubt it is not their primary business, and no sensible junior doubts that it is no part of his business to lead, when he has a leader present. But it is his business to prepare himself, to the best of his ability, to conduct the whole case as if he were the leader, should accident or unavoidable absence deprive him and his clients of the services of the senior counsel, just as much as it is the duty of the first lieutenant of a ship to be prepared, to the best of his ability, to take the command should the captain fall in action. Few men are born leaders at the Bar, any more than in the camp; and few men learn to be leaders who are lulled into indolence by the certainty that they will not on any occasion be called upon to lead. Were there, then, no other reason than that of training an efficient Bar—and there are many—we should rejoice to see a return to a practice under which it will be impossible for junior counsel ever to say, that they may not be charged with the whole responsibility of conducting a case.

LEGACY DUTY ON PROPERTY ADMINISTERED OUT OF GREAT BRITAIN.

DIFFICULT questions frequently arise with respect to the liability of property to legacy-duty in this country, where either the deceased owner died domiciled in a foreign country or in a colony, or the property is administered out of this country. The difficulty, however, now resides principally in the application of the law to the facts of each individual case; for, with one exception, to be presently noticed, the rules by which cases of this kind are governed have been settled by the modern decisions upon a satisfactory footing. It was formerly thought that all personal property administered in this country was liable to legacy-duty, without regard to the domicile of the deceased owner; at least, when that owner was a British subject. In The Attorney-General v. Osbornell (1 Price, 185) the testator was a British subject resident in the East Indies; and it was held, that legacies bequeathed by him to persons living in England, and paid in England by his executors, who had proved his will in England, out of assets realised in India, were liable to legacy-duty. The judgment in that case is remarkably meagre and unsatisfactory. The decision, however, was followed in The Attorney-General v. Beaton, (7 Price, 560); and the ground of the decision in that case was expressed to be, that the legacy was paid in this country by one who was administrator here. In Logan v. Fairlie (2 Sim. & S. 284) the testator was a major in the service of the East India Company, resident in India, where he died, and where all his property was situate. His will was proved in India by his executor, who was resident there, and was not proved in England. The residue was remitted by the executor to his agent in England. Sir John Leach, V. C., held, in a suit by the residuary legatees against the agent to have the residue secured, that the legacy-duty was payable, and also that administration should have been taken out in England, and the administrator made a party to the suit. The question of domicile was not discussed. Sir J. Leach admitted, that, if the residue had been remitted to England for the specific use of the legatees, the duty would not have been payable; but he said the case before him was one where a part of the assets was found in England without any specific appropriation. The decision was overruled by the Lords Commissioners, on the ground that the residue had been appropriated in India. (Logan v. Fairlie, 1 My. & C. 59).

The point had been decided in the same way, as to a specific legacy, in Hay v. Fairlie, (1 Russ. 117), where it appears that the testator was domiciled in India. In Logan v. Fairlie the domicile must also be taken to have been Indian, as the testator was in the East India Company's service. (See Marsh v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & P. 228; Bruce v. Bruce, Id., note; and Munroe v. Douglas, 5 Mad. 379). The doctrine of Hay v. Fairlie was affirmed by the decision of the House of Lords in The Attorney-General v. Jackson (8 Bligh, 15; S. C., nom. The Attorney-General v. Forbes, 2 Cl. & Fin. 48, Jackson v. Forbes, 2 Cr. & J. 382), and even carried further. There the testator, a British subject, died in India, having personal property there, and none in England. His executors proved the will there, but the residuary estate was invested in England in their names; and two of them subsequently came to England, when, a suit having been instituted to ascertain the rights of the residuary legatees, and the fund paid into court, it was held that the Crown was not entitled to legacy-duty; and the grounds of the decision appear to have been, that the will was not proved and the estate was not administered in this country. In that case the deceased was an officer in the British service at the time of his death, and his domicile was therefore that of his native country, Scotland.

In Arnold v. Arnold (2 My. & C. 256) the testator died domiciled in India, where the whole of his estate, not specifically bequeathed, was situate. It was held, that the English executors, administering the Indian estate in England, were not bound to pay legacy-duty; and the ground of the decision was, that the Stamp Act only applied to persons domiciled in this country.

In Re Ewin, (1 Cr. & J. 137), the testator having died domiciled in England, it was held, that foreign funds, transferable and payable abroad, but dealt with as part of his assets by his executors in England, were liable to the duty. (See also Re Coates, 7 M. & W. 390). On the other hand, in Re Bruce, (2 Cr. & J. 437), property situate in this country, and administered here by the English executor of a foreign testator who had died abroad, was held to be exempt from duty. But the Court left the question open, whether the duty would have attached if the testator had been a foreigner domiciled abroad. In The Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Devereux (13 Sim. 14) the duty was held not to attach in respect of property situate abroad belonging to a British subject who died domiciled abroad. Lastly, in Thompson v. The Advocate-General, (9 Jur. 217; 12 Cl. & Fin. 1), the testator, a native of Scotland, died domiciled in Demerara, a colony belonging to Great Britain, but in which the Dutch law remained in force; his will was proved in Scotland, and legacies were paid to legatees residing there. It was held, by the House of Lords, reversing a decision of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, and overruling The Attorney-General v. Cockrell and The Attorney-General v. Beatson, that the legacy-duty was not payable. Tindal, C.J., in delivering the opinion of the judges, said that there was no distinction between the case proposed to them and that decided in the House of Lords, (The Attorney-General v. Forbes, 2 Cl. & Fin. 48), except the circumstance, that in the present question the property was assumed to be, for the purposes of the probate, locally situate in England at the time of the death, a circumstance which was held to be immaterial in Re Ewin, (1 Cr. & J. 151). The Lords, however, appear to have decided the case on the ground of the domicile, which certainly was not the foundation of the decision in The Attorney-General v. Forbes.

The case of The Attorney-General v. Jackson (or Forbes) remains unimpeached, and, taken in connexion with the other cases, we think it clearly decides, that if the property is administered in a foreign country, or in a colony, by an executor or administrator who does not derive his authority from an English court, the legacy-duty does not attach, whether the testator died domiciled in England or not. The Stamp Act only applies, we conceive, to transactions within the country to which it gives the law; and as the legacy-duty is only made payable in respect of appropriations or payments by executors or administrators of the estates of deceased persons, it seems to be clear, upon principle as well as authority, that the duty is not demandable unless both conditions exist, namely, 1, the decease of a person dying subject, by reason of domicile, to the law, and, 2, the appropriation or payment by an executor or administrator within the limits in which the law has force. If either condition is absent, the duty is not payable. The latter condition is one which can seldom afford an opportunity for discussion in our courts, and it appears to have been overlooked by recent writers on the subject. Both Mr. Justice Williams, in his Treatise on Executors, (4th ed., vol. 2, p. 1392), and Mr. Tilsley, in his 2nd edition of his valuable Treatise on the Stamp Laws, (p. 685), appear to consider that the whole of the personal property of the deceased, wherever situate and wherever administered, is liable to legacy-duty, if the deceased died in a British domicile. But it cannot be doubted, at least, that the law has provided no means for recovering legacy-duty on the personal property of a deceased Englishman situate abroad or in a colony, administered and distributed there among legatees or next of kin resident there, by a personal representative constituted there, and never coming within the jurisdiction of the British courts.

From a little work recently published* it appears that the authorities at the Stamp-office have not yet arrived at correct views on the subject. The publication is stated to have been suggested by the following circumstances:—"A captain in one of her Majesty's regiments serving in the East Indies died in that country. His personal estate was situated there, and letters of administration were taken out to him in the proper court in that country by his widow, under which his estate was collected, his debts paid, and the residue was invested in the Indian funds for the benefit of his widow and next of kin. It afterwards became necessary to administer to him in this country, in order to obtain a sum due to his estate by the War-office. A year afterwards a portion of the residue invested in India was brought to this country. The Legacy-duty-office obtained information of this remittance, and upon an account being rendered to them of the estate which was administered in England, they demanded an account also of the estate administered in India, and that duty should be paid on the whole estate, wherever situate." The claim was rested on the ground that the testator had an English domicile at the time of his decease.

It is perfectly clear, that, in the circumstances as stated by Mr. Alcock, the claim is unfounded. Mr. Alcock has investigated the cases very minutely, but we think he has injured his cause by attempting to prove, not merely that domicile is not the only test of the liability to legacy-duty, but that it is not a test at all in cases where the deceased was a British subject, and died in a British colony in which the English law is in force. The authorities conclusively shew that no legacy-duty is payable if the deceased was not domiciled in that part of the British dominions in which the Stamp Acts are in force. Mr. Alcock denies that there can be an Indian domicile as distinguished from a British domicile. He says, "Domicile is a term belonging originally to questions of distribution of personal estate of persons dying abroad. It has since been extended to questions of the liability to duty of those estates, and it must receive the same construction in one case as in the other. There may be a domicile in England as against a foreign country, or as against a colony whose laws for the distribution of such estates are not English, as, for instance, Demerara." This is a mistake. Domicile is a status which has reference, not to climate, to race, or to a certain government, but to the local authority and extent of the particular law which is in question. Some of the laws which are in force in England are in force in some of the British colonies, because they were part of the law when the English law was introduced into those colonies. Other laws of England are not in force in the colonies, or in some of them, either because they were enacted after the acquisition of them, or because they were expressly confined to certain parts of the empire. Every part of the British dominions within which a particular law has no force is, with respect to that law, a foreign country; and domicile in that place is as effectual to exclude the operation of that law as domicile in a country subject to a different government. India is, with reference to our stamp laws, as much a foreign country as France; but with reference to the laws for the distribution of personal estate, it is not a foreign country, because those laws are adopted there. On the other hand, Scotland is a foreign country with reference to the English law of distribution, and is not a foreign country with reference to the English stamp laws.

* "Personal Property in the East Indies, in what Cases subject to or exempt from Legacy and Residue Duty; being an attempt to shew, from a revision of the leading cases on that subject, that the personal property of any British subject dying in India, which is administered and appropriated there, is not liable to legacy or residue duty in this country. By John Beresford Alcock, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law." Benning. 1850.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthily 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuit, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

THE question of the individual liability of the members of an insurance company upon a policy containing the usual clause, that the assured should be remunerated for his loss out of the society's funds, and that the shareholders should not be responsible beyond the amount of their shares, has been much considered in several recent cases. One of the earliest decisions upon the subject was Alchorne v. Saville, (6 B. Moo. 202, note). There three directors of an insurance company had executed a policy to indemnify the plaintiff from loss by fire, and they thereby ordered, directed, and appointed the directors for the time being to pay the loss out of the effects of the company. An action of covenant having been brought upon this policy, against subsequent directors, was held not to be maintainable, inasmuch as there was no covenant, but a mere order or direction to indemnify the plaintiff, and also as the defendants had not executed the deed. These were the grounds of the judgment, and as such were subsequently cited and distinguished in Andrews v. Ellison, (6 B. Moo. 199). The directors of a fire association had, in that case, executed a policy, declaring that the plaintiff should be remunerated out of the company's funds in case of loss by fire, and that neither of the directors who signed the policy should be liable to any demand for loss, except under the articles establishing the society. The plaintiff, having sustained a loss, sued the directors who had signed the policy, and averred in his declaration that the funds were sufficient to satisfy the amount of such loss. The defendants were held liable, upon the ground that they had agreed to be responsible to the plaintiff as far as the funds of the society would allow. In Gurney v.

VOL. XIV.

L

Rawlins (2 M. & W. 87) the directors, by the policy, ordered, directed, and appointed, that if the assured should die, the capital stock and funds should stand charged and be liable to pay his executors, &c. a certain sum. The assured died in the diocese of Exeter, and the policy was in that diocese at the time of his death; the defendants, however, resided, and all the stock and funds of the company were situate, in the diocese of London. The executors, under a probate from the Diocesan Court of Exeter, sued in covenant the directors who had signed the policy; and upon its being objected that the covenant was bona notabilia in London, where the funds were situate, and that it was a mere charge on such funds, the Court held that the action was rightly brought, the defendants being liable in their own persons, and the policy not giving any right against the fund itself. Parke, B., said, "The defendants undertake, by an instrument under seal, that this sum of money shall be paid if the funds prove adequate; therefore it is equivalent to a covenant to pay if J. S. goes to Rome." In Dawson v. Wrench and Others (18 L. J., Ex., 229) the declaration stated that the plaintiff insured his ship with a company on a policy which provided that the capital stock of the company should alone be liable, and that no proprietor should be charged beyond the amount of his share; that the defendants were directors who executed the policy, and, in consideration of the premium, promised that the company should perform such policy; it then averred a loss, and the sufficiency of the funds. The defendants were held personally responsible. And in Reid v. Allan, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 1082), which was an action on a similar policy, the Court of Exchequer held, that a member of the company who had not subscribed the policy was liable thereon, the funds being sufficient. The case of Halket

v. The Merchant Traders' Ship Loan and Assurance Company (14 Jur., part 1, p. 222) came before the Court of Queen's Bench on a motion for leave to issue execution, in pursuance of sect. 66 of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, against a member of an insurance company, upon a judgment obtained against the company. It appeared, from the affidavit used on the occasion, that the capital stock was alone to be liable, that a fieri facias had been issued against the company, and nulla bona returned. Execution was refused, upon the ground, we should presume—for it does not appear very clearly from the judgment—that the funds of the company were evidently insufficient, nulla bona having been returned to the execution against such funds. The meaning of the clause that the subscribers should not be liable beyond the amount of their shares, but that the company's funds should alone answer the demand, was interpreted by the Court to be—"that the assured shall look to the funds of the company alone, so far as any remedy at law extends, and that the individual subscribers shall be liable only to contribute to the funds of the company to the amount of their respective shares, which liability must be enforced by the company against the subscribers, either at law or in equity, as the case may be, and the enforcement of which liability may possibly be compelled by the assured by some proceeding against the company." The rule, therefore, deducible from the authorities upon the subject, appears to be, that the clause in question does not prevent the assured from maintaining an action upon the policy, provided that the funds of the company are sufficient to meet his claim, and such action may be brought against either the parties who subscribed the policy, or any member of the company.

We call the attention of our readers particularly to the report of Lord Brougham's speech on Chancery Reform, (in another part of this journal), as the subject of it is of great interest to the Profession. We cannot, however, permit all the credit of the suggestions made by his Lordship to be attributed to his "near and dear relative," inasmuch as this humble journal pointed out long ago the applicability of the principles of the Winding-up Act, to certain classes of general Chancery business. (See 13 Jur., part 2, p. 330). Indeed, the idea so stood out, (if we may use the language of an artist), that scarcely any man, with a grain of observation, could fail to see it. We claim, therefore, no great credit for having seen the general applicability of the Winding-up Act, but, such as there is, we claim, at least, to share it with Lord Brougham's "near and dear relative."

For observations on the details of Lord Brougham's bill, we shall wait till we have a copy of it before us; but its general principles we cordially approve. We do not, however, see why consent administrations alone should be subjected to the operation of a Winding-up Act. The principle should be, that wherever the nature of the case is such, that there must be a decree for an account before the questions of right can be finally determined, the proceedings should commence with something in the nature of a winding-up order; that is, all the pleadings preparatory to the preliminary decree for an account, should be dispensed with.

We have received a communication from the author of the pamphlet commented upon in THE JURIST of last week, requesting us to state that the Vice-Chancellor of England perused the pamphlet in question as soon as it was in type, and that it was not till after his Honor's full and unhesitating approbation of the circulation of it, that it was published.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, March 25.

REFORM IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

Lord Brougham presented a petition which prayed their Lordships to give their sanction to a bill of which he then proposed the second reading. He should make as brief an explanation as he could of its substance, and after that he should move the second reading of it conditionally, in order that it might be printed and circulated during the recess, and thus have the benefit of the consideration and amendment of the profession of the law before its next stage in the progress of legislation. He had already stated, from the petition which he had just presented, that great difficulty existed in obtaining payments of legacies, and even of debts, by suit in the Court of Chancery, even in those cases which were uncontested, and in which there was no litigation, doubt, or difficulty. The impossibility of obtaining redress in such cases was the evil; the remedy for it was the bill which he then held in his hand. He did not take to himself the credit of devising that remedy; it was due, in the first place, to an act of the Legislature which was passed a year or two ago, called the Winding-up Act, and which had worked marvellously well; and, in the next place, to a near and dear relative of his own, Master Brougham, who had conceived the happy idea of extending that act, and of applying its machinery to all cases of administration suits in the Court of Chancery. He (Lord Brougham) had long known the evil of the present system, but he had never been able to grapple with it as his near and dear relative had done, owing to his knowledge of the duties performed in the Master's office, acquired by his experience of them during the last eighteen or nineteen years. The main object of the bill was to commence consent administrations in the Master's office. To secure an immediate notice to all parties, a judicial advertisement was to be made by the Master that he had commenced the administration, and an immediate and cheap appeal was to be given to the Court, in case any party was dissatisfied. To induce solicitors to get through their work rapidly, and without the expense of copies, they were to be paid, as far as possible, one fee for the job. It would then be the solicitor's interest to spend as little as possible, and finish as soon as possible. This was already done under the Winding-up Act, and had been attempted under the New Orders. Such being the case, he was about to introduce to their Lordships a scene of intolerable pressure on parties, of the most cruel injustice to individuals, of an enormous amount of property prevented from being enjoyed by the persons to whom it really belonged, and of an abuse of enormous extent in the courts of Chancery, for which neither the courts, nor the judges, nor the masters, nor the practitioners were responsible, but for which the law, and the practice founded on the law, were alone responsible. It was now found by law that an executor or a trustee (for a trustee now stood in the same place with an executor) was liable for unknown debts for years and years afterwards, although he had advertised for creditors to come forward. In proof of this position, the noble and learned Lord referred to Kneeshaw v. Freinhead, (3 My. & C. 123), decided by Lord Cottenham, C.; to that of Lowe v. Castor, (1 Beav. 426), decided by Lord Langdale, M. R.; and also to that of Hill v. Gormine, (Id. 540), decided by the same judge. In all these cases he contended that unknown debts, though advertised, were added on executors after a lapse of many years. Such being the case, it was clear that an executor, if he were in his senses, and had proved the will of his testator, had only one safe course to pursue, and that was to go into the Court of Chancery for his quietus. Their Lordships might, perhaps, suppose, that under such circumstances all executors did go there for such quietus.

No such thing. His relative, Master Brougham, had procured the true number of such executors as did so, by inquiries which he instituted at the Stamp-office. The probate returns shewed, that of persons possessed of personal estates in value between 500*l.* and 1000*l.*, from 4000 to 5000 persons died in a year; of persons possessed of personal property between 1000*l.* and 6000*l.*, 5000 to 6000; of persons possessed of personal property between 6000*l.* and 12,000*l.*, 1000 to 1500; and of persons possessed of personal property of 12,000*l.* and upwards, 800 to 1000. Rejecting all cases where the personal estate was sworn to be under 500*l.*, and assuming that half the rest came to the Court of Chancery, they ought to have 5000 to 6000 administrations in a year; but, from the Chancery returns, the actual number appeared to be not 600. Nine-tenths of the cases were therefore kept out of the court by the delays and enormous and intolerable expense of its proceedings. Now, if their Lordships were not alarmed, he would introduce them into the Court of Chancery, a place of which it was said, that if a man once got into it he would never get out of it. And here he would confine himself to the progress of a case where there was no litigation, and in which everything was done by consent. In the simplest administration suit there were two or three sets of parties, and therefore as many office copies of bill, with no real litigation. Then there were close copies; then the answers in draught; then the ingrossment; then a special commission to swear; then a special messenger to take the answer to London, as it was not allowed to send it by post; then office copies; then close copies; then counsel's opinion on evidence; then interrogatories to prove will, (if any land), although not disputed; then a special commission to examine witnesses; then evidence taken in secret, no one questioning the will; then special messenger to London; and then office copies. Sometimes there was an original will brought from the Probate Court at York to London, at an expense of 20*l.*, no one disputing it, or even looking at it; and then the cause was heard, and so entirely was the decision of course, that the Vice-Chancellor of England had disposed, to his knowledge, of sixty within the hour. Thus the learned judge was not one minute in hearing and making up his mind on each of these sixty cases. Then came the formal decree, "with the usual directions." His Lordship commented at length on the great and unnecessary expense incurred in administration suits prior to the decree for accounts, and then proceeded:—In addition to the entire saving of all costs up to the decree, a large saving would also be effected in the subsequent costs, as in further directions, petitions during progress of inquiry, supplemental and revivor suits, from death and other abatements, &c. The noble and learned Lord then read to the House the following examples of the costs in administration suits:—In Say v. Creed, which was an amicable suit, yet took three years and a half to complete, the costs to hearing were 150*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, and subsequent to it 647*l.*; forming a total of 797*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* In Reissnult v. Gillow, which was also an amicable suit, and took four years to complete, the costs to hearing were 300*l.*, and subsequent 1400*l.*; the sale of the estates was 600*l.*; making a total of 2300*l.*, or 1700*l.* independent of the sale of the estates. These costs were occasioned by constant petitions to the Court; but all this would in future be done by the Master at once. In the case of Clarke v. Clarke, which was a hostile suit, and took six years before it was completed, the costs to hearing were 150*l.*, and the subsequent costs against a fraudulent executor for an account were 900*l.*; making a total of 1050*l.* In the case of Gateley v. Carter, which was an amicable suit, and in which there was only one defendant, the costs to hearing were 80*l.*, and the subsequent costs 390*l.*; making a total of 470*l.* An Anonymous case, which was a hostile suit, had already taken up fifteen years, and was yet unfinished. The bill was filed by a creditor against an executor and others, for 1000*l.*, on an estate worth 20,000*l.*, devised among four families. There had been three supplemental bills and three bills of revivor in the course of the suit. The cost of getting before the Master in all the suits exceeded 1500*l.* By giving a power to proceed as in the Winding-up Act, notwithstanding deaths, the suit would have been finished in a year, at one-third the cost of merely getting into the Master's office. If any objection should be taken to the primary jurisdiction, that it was trusting too much to the Master, the answer was, that under the Winding-up Act he now adjudicated on larger sums and on more difficult questions than generally went before the Court, and in one-tenth of the time. He would now shew to their Lordships the effects of the Winding-up Act on a great concern, and the value of applying its machinery to other cases. A banking company was sent in Michaelmas Term, 1848, into the court, under a winding-up order. The debts and liabilities investigated and found before Christmas amounted to 522,348*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.*; on the 10th April, 1849, by sums paid off, the debts were reduced to 272,088*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*; and on the 31st December, 1849, to 173,777*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Thus in fourteen months this vast amount of debts, claims, and liabilities, affecting nearly 600 persons, had been examined and adjudicated upon; some appeals had been heard and decided, and the concern cleared to the extent of 348,570*l.*, out of 522,348*l.*; and of the remainder, nearly half was now disposed of, and the whole would probably be finished in a few months. This case, supposing it could have been worked as a partnership suit in the common way, would have lasted a century at least in the court, and have cost 100,000*l.* But it could never have been worked; for in Walsworth v. Holt (the Imperial Banking Company) a suit was instituted in 1840, was heard before the Lord Chancellor, and found impracticable. A private act was obtained, at great expense, to enable the Court to appoint a receiver, who was, however, neither to make calls nor to distribute assets. The receiver collected and kept the assets, which neither he nor the Court could distribute. There was one point on which he had already touched, and on which he was desirous to give some further explanation. The solicitor, he had told their Lordships, was to be paid by the job; and the reason was, that the solicitor was now paid on an absurd and vicious system. No one knew that better than his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, (Lord Langdale), and no one had worked harder to remove it. A man who brought to the service of his client talent, skill, and indefatigable industry, obtained by an expensive education and matured by long experience, ought to be properly and well remunerated. Now, the vicious nature of the principle on which payment was made to him was this—that he was not allowed by the rules of the Courts to make charges except in a particular manner. He knew more about the charges made in the courts of common law than he did about those made in the courts of equity; but, certainly, it did appear to him that the charges in the latter were more absurd than those in the former. Because a solicitor could not charge for certain exertions of his skill and labour, he was compelled, in order that he might exist by his profession, to put his client to many tedious and dilatory processes, which were not only expensive, but also very dangerous to that client, as they exposed him to the risk of being turned round by the Court, or by a skilful, or it might be an unscrupulous, adversary. From all such processes the suitor ought to be relieved, as they were of no use, but of considerable detriment to him. Of the absurdity of the system which allowed some and prevented other charges from being made, the noble and learned Lord gave some amusing instances. They were not allowed to charge the money they advanced to get up evidence for their clients—that evidence upon which perhaps the whole fortune of the suit depended. Formerly they were allowed nothing for their attendance on consultations, than which nothing could be more useful for the progress of a cause, or for the avoidance of blunders in the management. That rule, he believed, was altered now, and he was glad of it; but formerly no Master would allow such a charge in the taxation of a bill of costs. What was the consequence? The attorney, to pay himself adequately, was compelled to draw up a long brief, to the damnification of his client in every way. First, his counsel received a long and confused, instead of a terse and intelligible brief, and, having to wade through such a brief, was to be paid proportionally. The ingrossing clerks were also to be paid for copying the briefs; and he verily believed that in some cases three counsel had been employed when two would have sufficed, in order that the profits of a third brief might accrue to the solicitor. Now, it was for the interest of the attorney that his client should be put to as much expense as possible, and it was for the interest of the client that he should be put to as little. His object was, that his suit should be disposed of as speedily as possible, because the greater the delay the greater was the expense, which the client must pay out of his own pocket. His near and dear relative, Master Brougham, advised that a reasonable sum should be paid to the solicitor, proportioned to the interest and the difficulty of the business which he had to transact. On that principle his relative was prepared to stand; and, for his own part, he (Lord Brougham) must say that he entirely concurred in its justice.

Lord Langdale said, if the principle of the bill was to lessen, by all means consistent with justice, the expense and the delays of Chancery, then he most cordially gave it his support; but at the same time he was not to be understood as committing himself to all the details of the measure. One of their first duties ought certainly to be to shorten, as far as possible, proceedings in Chancery, and to lessen the expense. When his noble and learned friend, however, compared the proceedings under the Winding-up Act with the other business in Chancery, he should bear in mind that there was a complication of interests and numerous most important considerations arising out of ordinary suits in Chancery that did not arise under the Winding-up Act. There were, nevertheless, many things in the Winding-up Act that might be transferred with advantage to the other proceedings in Chancery.

After a few words from Lord Brougham, the bill was read a second time.

LONDON, APRIL 6, 1850.

WE have just received a very valuable work from America, consisting of two reports made by the Commissioners on Practice and Pleadings, appointed by the Government of New York, to the Legislature of that State; the one reporting a code of civil procedure, the other a code of criminal procedure, for the consideration and adoption, if approved, of the Legislature; and in order to induce those of our readers who pride themselves on being practical men, and on hating everything that is to be but is not actually done, not to turn aside from anything we may say on the subject, scared by the words "report" and "code," we will inform them that a part of the code recommended by the commissioners, has been for some time passed into law, by an act of the 11th April, 1849, (see 13 Jur., part 2, p. 225), and been since practically at work in the State of New York; and that, as to the remainder of the regulations proposed, we are informed by one of the learned commissioners, that it is considered probable that they also will, before long, be passed into law.

The object of the code, and the principle adopted in its formation, are best expressed in the words of the learned commissioners themselves. It is, they say, "intended to embody the whole law of the State concerning judicial remedies in civil cases, and to supersede the third part of the revised statutes, a portion of the first and second, a large number of subsequent statutes, and all of the common law on the subject of civil remedies."

And further—"It was a question with the commissioners of some embarrassment, how far it was wise to go into details. There were two opposite difficulties to be avoided—on one hand was the danger, by provisions too general, of leaving a wide space for judicial discretion; on the other, equal danger, by going into minute details, of making the practice inflexible and intricate, increasing the risks of mischance, and leaving unprovided for whatever particulars were unforeseen. Whether they have succeeded in finding what they desired—a middle path between a judicial discretion, too wide for safety on the one hand, and too narrow for convenience on the other—can only be known by the result. It is impossible, within the compass of this communication, to give any other than the most general account of the code, as it is now presented. It is divided into four parts. The first relates to the courts of justice, their organisation and jurisdiction, and the functions and duties of all judicial and ministerial officers connected with them; the second embraces the subject of civil actions, with all their incidents; the third relates to special proceedings; and the fourth to evidence."

VOL. XIV.

We are not at present about to examine generally the nature of the proposed American code, though we shall probably return to it as occasion may render the consideration of any of its articles interesting. We shall confine our present observations to the suggestions made in the chapter on Evidence—suggestions in which we take particular interest, because they proceed upon principles which we have often advocated in THE JURIST, and which have not yet been, though we have little doubt that they will ultimately be, acted upon in this country.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, (Lord Denman's Act), manifested the objection to the competency of a witness on the ground of interest or crime; but it left still subsisting the incapacity of a party to a suit or action. So does the American law still; but, by the new code, it is proposed to admit the evidence of parties, as well as of any other interested persons; and there is to be no exclusion of evidence but on the ground of incapacity from unsoundness of mind, or incapacity arising from tender age, and on the ground of confidence. The grounds on which the admissibility of the evidence of parties has been advocated by gentlemen of considerable legal knowledge and experience, are familiar, probably, to many of our readers, from a perusal of the report made by a committee of the Law Amendment Society, which was recently printed and circulated. But it will be, perhaps, more interesting to practical men to know, that the plan has been tried, and with success, in the State of Connecticut. We quote from the report of the American commissioners a communication made to one of them by the Lieutenant-Governor of the State of Connecticut on the subject. He says—"As the statute is recent, and excepts from its provisions suits pending at its passage, the experiment has not been fully tested. So far, however, as it has been tried, I may safely say, after conversing with eminent gentlemen of the Bar in different parts of the State, and from my own observation, professional and judicial, that the result is highly satisfactory. So important a change in the rules of evidence met, of course, at the outset, a very earnest opposition, especially (with some distinguished exceptions) from the senior members of the Profession. Their fears, I believe, are in a great measure quieted, and I am not aware of any intention or desire to attempt a return to the old system."

"Many innovations on the principles of the common law, relating to the admissibility of interested witnesses, had formerly been made in Connecticut. The most common action with us is 'book-debt,' and in this the parties, and others having an interest in the event of the suit, had always been allowed to testify. The action of account at law is still in constant use here, in which the same rule exists. In other cases special statutes had obviated the difficulties arising from the restrictions of the common law, until it was found that either both of the parties, or one of them, were permitted, or might be required, to testify in about twenty of the different forms of civil and judicial proceedings. These changes having proved salutary, it was at last deemed safe and expedient to throw open the door entirely. There appears no tendency to go back; and as soon as the new system is firmly established, I think it will be a matter of surprise that any other should ever have obtained."

We trust that this evidence will go far to remove the prejudice that still exists against the extension to actions involving large interests, of that practice of examining the parties which it is, we believe, generally admitted, works well in the so-called insignificant cases within the jurisdiction of the county courts. We recommend to our readers' attention a striking publication*, in which the able judge of the Marylebone County Court has given the result of his experience and reflection on the subject.

* On the Expediency of Admitting the Testimony of Parties to Suits in the New County Courts, and in the Courts of Westminster Hall. To which are appended General Remarks relative to the New County Courts. By Andrew Amos, Esq., Judge of the County Courts of Marylebone, Brompton, and Brentford; Downing Professor of Law in the University of Cambridge; late Member of the Supreme Court of India. Cambridge, Deighton.

THE NEW STAMP-DUTIES BILL.

By the bill recently brought into the House of Commons by Mr. Bernal, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Hayter, very important alterations in the stamp laws are proposed. We have only space for a brief notice of the principal matters.

The new duties are to be payable in respect of instruments signed or executed by any party thereto, or which bear date, after the 5th day of July next.

The lease for a year stamp, required by the stat. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, s. 1, and by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 2, is abolished; so that, after the act comes into operation, there will be no difference, in point of economy, between a conveyance by appointment and a release or grant. This is effected by a clause in the body of the act. But in the schedule of repealed duties, the title "Bargain and Sale for a Year," from the schedule to the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, which is applicable to leases for years actually executed, is included.

The duties repealed are—

The ad valorem and progressive duties on bonds to secure the payment or transfer of money, annuities, or stock in the funds, Bank Stock, &c.

The ad valorem and progressive duties on conveyances. The duties on leases.

The ad valorem and progressive duties on mortgages, but not the duties on transfers of mortgages, nor the provisions in the schedule to the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, respecting several instruments relating to one mortgage, and instruments containing mortgages and other matter, (under which last provision it has been held, that a deed containing a further charge, and also a further security for the old debt, requires the deed stamp, in addition to the ad valorem stamp on the further charge).

The duties on settlements.

The duties on warrants of attorney.

The act is also to repeal the special duties payable in Ireland on leases.

In lieu of the repealed duties, the following are to be imposed:—

BOND for the payment of any definite and certain sum of money, not exceeding 50*l.* £0 5 0
Exceeding 50*l.*, and not exceeding 100*l.* 0 10 0
And where the sum shall exceed 100*l.*, then for every 100*l.*, and also for any fractional part of 100*l.* 0 10 0

The ad valorem duties on bonds for securing future advances, and for the transfer of stock, &c., (which is to include shares in the stock and funds of the Banks of England and Ireland, the East India Company, the South Sea Company, or any other company or corporation), are on the same scale; and the absurd doctrine in Scott v. Allop, (2 Price, 20), that the highest duty on a bond for securing future advances unlimited in amount, is not to be measured by the penalty, is expressly repudiated.

BOND to secure money or stock, also secured by a mortgage of even date, duly stamped, and referred to in the bond, if the money or value secured does not exceed 200*l.* . . . the ad valorem mortgage duty.

If it exceed that sum £1 0 0

BOND as an additional security for money or stock previously secured by a bond, mortgage, or other security, duly stamped ad valorem, and referred to in the bond, if the sum or value secured do not exceed 300*l.* the ad valorem duty.

If it exceed that sum £1 15 0

BOND given as the only or principal security for an annuity, upon the original creation and sale thereof —the ad valorem conveyance duty.

BOND given in the like case as a collateral security —the ad valorem duty, or 1*l.*, whichever is least.

BOND in other cases to secure an annuity for life, or of uncertain duration, not being interest, or rent on a lease, where the annuity does not exceed 50*l.* per annum£1 0 0

Progressive duty on bonds, if charged with an ad valorem duty not exceeding 1*l.*—the ad valorem duty.

In other cases£1 5 0

CONVEYANCE "upon the sale of any property, real, heritable, personal, or moveable, or of any other matter or thing whatever, and of whatever nature, or of any estate, right, title, interest, claim, or security in, to, out of, upon, or in respect of any such property, matter, or thing:"

Where the conveyance is made in consideration, wholly or in part, of any annuity, rent, or yearly sum to be afterwards borne or paid by the purchaser, (except rent reserved by a lease charged with ad valorem duty, quit or chief rent, or, in Scotland, feu duty, land-tax, tithes, or other public or parochial burthens, annual payments for land-tax redeemed, or for exoneration from tithes, copyhold rents or services, and transfers of leases and under-leases), the value of the annuity shall be ascertained according to the provisions of the Legacy-duty Act, (36 Geo. 3. c. 52, the highest value in the tables to that act being the limit in cases not within the tables, and no allowance being made for contingent defeasance, and a rent in perpetuity being valued at twenty-five years' purchase), and such value shall be stated in the conveyance, and charged with duty. And where the consideration is, wholly or in part, stock in the funds, or any Government debenture, or stock of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland, or any debenture or stock of any corporation, company, society, or person or persons, payable only at the will of the debtor, then the market value shall be stated and charged with duty. And where the consideration is, wholly or in part, a mortgage, judgment, or bond, or a debenture, the amount whereof shall be recoverable by the holder, or any other security whatever, whether payable in money or otherwise, then such calculation shall be made according to the sum due thereon both for principal and interest.

*The progressive duty on conveyances is the ad valorem duty, or 1*l., whichever is least.

COVENANT in lieu of a bond chargeable with ad valorem duty—the same duty as a bond for the like purpose; unless given as a collateral or further security, where the ad valorem duty has been or is paid on another instrument referred to; except also covenants in mortgages and transfers for the same sums as are secured on mortgage. (The covenants in mortgage-deeds and transfers of mortgages must, in future, be limited in the same manner as the mortgage securities themselves now are; for the new proviso under the head "Mortgage," making the stamp the limit where none is expressed, does not extend to covenants).

LEASE, or AGREEMENT FOR A LEASE, for any fine or premium—the same duty as in case of a conveyance.

In case of a lease of any mine or minerals, or other like property, at a variable royalty, but with a stipulation for a minimum sum or value per annum, ad valorem duty shall be paid on such dead rent.

Leases at corn-rents to be charged with ad valorem duty.

Where distinct rents are reserved to several lessors, being part owners, the duty shall be paid on the aggregate amount.

LEASE, or AGREEMENT FOR A LEASE, not otherwise charged in this schedule£1 15 0

Counterpart or duplicate of lease—the ad valorem duty, or 1*l.* 15*s.*, whichever is least.

Lease made in pursuance of a previous agreement, duly stamped ad valorem to the amount of 1*l.* or upwards£1 0 0

No ad valorem duty shall be charged on a penal rent.

*Progressive duty on leases, &c.—the ad valorem duty, or 1*l., whichever is least.

MORTGAGE, including "any agreement, contract, bond, or other writing whatever, accompanied with a deposit of a title-deed or title-deeds or other instrument or writing relating to any property, matter, or thing, for making a mortgage, &c. of any lands, estate, or property comprised in such title-deed or deeds, instrument or writing, or for pledging or charging any such deed, instrument or writing, lands, estate, or property, matter, or thing, in law or equity, as a security, or whereby any such deed, &c., lands, &c., shall be made, or shall be or become charged or affected as a security in law or equity:"

Where the same respectively shall be made as a security for the payment of any definite and certain sum advanced or lent at the time, or previously due and owing, or forborne to be paid, being payable, Not exceeding 50*l.*£0 5 0

(The same provision in respect of mortgages for future advances to a limited amount, with the same exceptions, as in the old act; but)

If the total amount of the money secured, or to be ultimately recoverable thereon, shall be uncertain and without any limit, then the same shall be available as a security for such an amount as the ad valorem duty denoted by any stamp or stamps thereon will extend to cover. "Provided that if the same be stamped after the execution thereof by any party, it shall take effect as a charge or security for or in respect of any sum to which the stamp-duty so impressed thereon after such execution shall relate only from the day on which it shall be so stamped, and not before, as if the same had been then first executed; any law to the contrary thereof notwithstanding." And in such case, two of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue are to certify the day of stamping on the deed.

And where made to secure the transfer of any share in any of the government or parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stock and funds of the Bank of England or the Bank of Ireland, East India Company, South Sea Company, or any other company or corporation, in consideration of stock or money advanced or lent at the time &c.—the ad valorem duty on the value of the stock or fund secured at the market price.

Progressive duty on mortgages—the ad valorem duty, or 1l., whichever is least.

SETTLEMENT (as defined in the old act) of any definite and certain principal sum or sums of money, or any annuity, rent, or yearly sum, (whether charged on or to be invested in lands or not, and if charged on lands, whether to be raised at all events or not), or any definite and certain share or shares in any of the government or parliamentary stocks or funds, or in the stock and funds of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or Bank of Ireland, East India Company, South Sea Company, or any other company or corporation,

Exceeding 100l., for every 100l., or part of 100l. 0 5 0

And where, on the settlement of any land or lands, or heritable subjects, any sum or sums of money or stock shall be charged thereon, or any power given to charge any such lands, &c. with any sum or sums of money or stock for raising portions for children, or otherwise, the said ad valorem duty shall be charged in respect of such sum or sums.

And instruments charged with the said duty, containing any settlement of lands, or other property, or other matter besides the settlement of money or stock, shall be charged also with the duty payable on a separate instrument containing such additional matter, except progressive duty.

Where there are duplicates, one only to bear the ad valorem duty, the other to be charged as a separate deed.

Progressive duty on settlements—the ad valorem duty, or 1l. 5s., whichever is least.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY to secure payment or transfer of money, stock, or shares—the same duty as on a bond for the like purpose.

Unless the ad valorem duty has been already paid on a bond or mortgage for the same purpose, or the defendant is in custody for the amount, and then £0 5 0

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY not otherwise charged in this schedule £1 15 0

By sect. 6, the penalty for stamping instruments after execution is increased to 10l., or the amount of the stamp required to be impressed, whichever is greater; and in lieu of the receipt for the penalty now in use, the instrument is to be stamped with a stamp denoting the payment of the penalty, and is to be inadmissible in evidence unless so stamped, (i. e. the judge at any trial must now see that the stamp for the penalty is impressed, if it appear that the instrument was not duly stamped before execution). But the commissioners may remit the penalty in certain cases, at their discretion, if the instrument is brought to be stamped within twelve months after execution. (It is not stated how the fact of such remission is to be proved, so as to render the instrument admissible in evidence without the stamp for the penalty).

The commissioners may direct the stamping, without penalty, of instruments executed abroad, and brought to be stamped within two calendar months from the time of arriving in the United Kingdom.

Sect. 8 repeals the restrictions in the 9 Geo. 4, c. 27, s. 4, upon vendors of receipt stamps, leaving them a liberty to charge such profits as they please. Some such measure was necessary to counteract the effect of the recent reduction of the allowance to vendors of stamps, which has rendered receipt stamps almost as unattainable as Queen Anne's farthings.

Considered merely with reference to the operation of the stamp-duties as charges on the subject, the proposed act will effect a considerable improvement, by mitigating the gross inequality of the existing scale of ad valorem duties, and by relieving many small transactions from the exorbitant duties to which they are now liable. But even here less is done than might have been expected. The ad valorem duty on bonds and mortgages advances, after the first 100l. secured, by steps of 10s. each, while the duty on conveyances advances, up to a consideration of 175l., by steps of 2s. 6d.; and thence, up to a consideration of 500l., by steps of 5s.; from that point to 1000l., by steps of 15s.; and then by steps of 1l. The ad valorem duty on rents in leases differs from both, advancing by 2s. 6d. up to a rent of 100l., and then by steps of 5s.; while the scale of duties on settlements has a uniform difference of 5s. Now, the only reason for not adopting a scale of duties varying strictly in proportion to the value of the subject-matter, is the necessity of having a limited number of dies; but there can be no reason for applying to one class of instruments a scale founded on a different principle, or with more abrupt differences than are applied to another class of instruments, because the same dies may be used indifferently for all. Indeed, it is evident, that by the combination of two or three stamps, or by the use of very simple mechanical contrivances, the stamping of instruments upon a scale proceeding by differences of 1s. or less, might be readily effected.

The extension of the ad valorem duties to the values of shares in other "companies or corporations" than the Banks of England and Ireland, the East India Company, and the South Sea Company, will, we fear, produce great inconvenience. The values of such shares are to be accounted according to the average price during the ten days preceding the date of the instrument, or if there have been no sale within that period, then "on the latest day preceding on which there shall have been a known sale." The admissibility in evidence of important documents should not be made dependent on a criterion so vague and so liable to error, and so difficult of proof after the lapse of years, as this; nor should purchasers and others be put to the trouble and expense of inquiring into such matters, which, after all, can never be ascertained with certainty. The word "company" stands in need of definition.

The words imposing the ad valorem duty on conveyances are too extensive. They would include all arrangements between partners dissolving partnership, by which one takes a sum of money in lieu of his share, compositions with creditors, arrangements and compromises of family affairs, and disputed claims, &c. And the extension of the duty to considerations by way of annuity is expressed in terms which promise to be prolific of doubt and controversy. A different objection must be made to the charge of the ad valorem duty on considerations consisting of debts. Nothing can be more absurd and unjust than to treat a bad debt as a consideration of the same value as a good debt of the same nominal amount. The old stamp act merely charged the duty on debts charged on the property sold; and, even so limited, operated with great hardship in cases of deficient security. But the whole of the alterations under the head "Conveyance" in this bill, appear to have been very little or very ill considered.

By sect. 5, if any person shall have avoided, neglected, or omitted to pay, or shall hereafter avoid, &c. to pay any stamp-duty, or shall have received or shall receive any money for stamp-duty, and shall not apply the same accordingly, "or if any person shall write, make, or prepare, or cause or procure to be written, made, or *prepared, or to be signed or executed, any deed or instrument liable to stamp-duty, and not duly stamped, every such person, in any and every such case, shall be accountable for the amount of such duty;" and the liability shall be enforced in the Court of Exchequer by rule, under which the party sought to be charged may be examined. Under the present law (which is a dead letter) a penalty of 5*l.* is imposed on the person ingrossing the deed. The effect of this clause would be to render every party and every solicitor concerned in the execution of a deed liable for the due stamping of it. Of course it will not be allowed to stand in its present form.*

The temporary loans on securities by deposit of deeds, dock warrants, &c., by which the mercantile transactions of the country are now so much facilitated, will be entirely stopped, if the proposed extension of the tax on mortgages is submitted to. Nothing can be more inexpedient and unjust than a tax on mortgages, which almost always either fetters the use of capital, or is a burthen upon a poor man or his creditors.

The ad valorem duty on money settlements was a clumsy and inefficient substitute for a tax on successions; and the extension of it in the present bill only provokes the inquiry why settlements of land are exempted.

The amendments effected by this bill, with respect to small transactions, will not, we hope, be accepted by the country as a bribe to permit the continuance of those rude, absurd, and vexatious restrictions on the use and transfer of property, which ought to be abolished without delay, and replaced by an equivalent addition to the income tax, or from some other less objectionable source. But if the stamp laws are to be endured for a few years longer, the least that ought to be required is, a thorough revision and consolidation of the whole body of them, and a settlement of the many perplexing doubts which have arisen upon them.

LONDON, APRIL 13, 1850.

OUR readers will not fail to have observed the largeness of the majority which, on Wednesday last, carried in the House of Commons the second reading of the County Courts Extension Bill. Striking as that majority was, significant as it was of the popular wish, it was scarcely more to be remarked than the extreme want of argument, and the extreme abundance of declamation, on the side of the party opposing the bill. First, it was said there would be danger, if the experiment turned out unproductive of injury, that it would be carried further; next, that there would be no Bar, or no regular Bar, attending the county courts, and justice could not be steadily administered without a Bar; then, if there was a Bar, the objects of the bill would be defeated: so that to be without a Bar was the vice of the courts to be apprehended, and yet to have a Bar would not cure the mischief. Then there was the usual imputation of motives, as though the whole bill had been got up by county court judges and county court clerks in order to obtain larger salaries. Nor was there wanting the solemn warning that is so often addressed to the House, foretelling endless confusion and endless mischief if the voice of the speaker is not listened to. Then, to crown all, there was the superantique argument, "If you are to have a jurisdiction of 50*l.*, why not 55*l.*? If 55*l.*, why not 100*l.*?—why not 1000*l.*?"

All this sort of language it is lamentable to hear from the lips of men who are old enough, and learned enough, and, if they would not wilfully shut the eyes of their minds, really wise enough to know better. So, however, it is, so it always has been, and probably so it ever will be, when ideas which have become fixed, no matter how, are assailed.

Now, to plunge at once into the middle of the question, what is it that some lawyers, we will not say the lawyers generally, are afraid of? And if there is anything to be really afraid of, what is the course they are taking to avert the danger? We will answer for them. They are afraid of a legal revolution, and, without power to avert it, they are letting the conduct of it slip from theirs into other hands.

Who that has noticed the growth during the last twenty years, the rapid growth during the last ten years, of the desire of the people of this country for a less concentrated and a less expensive judicature—who that has seen the County Courts Act pass, and the county courts in full operation, can shut his eyes to the fact, that in this, the third state of our material civilisation, the want, the demand, and, we may add, the right of the people, is to have an administration of justice which shall adapt itself to that new state of commerce which has for its principle multiplied small operations, instead of a few gigantic ones; and, as it is phrased, quick returns with small profits, in lieu of slow returns and high profits? This is not the place to discuss whether that new state of commerce is or is not for the benefit of the country. That the change has taken place is beyond contest; it is a fait accompli; and the question remaining to be solved is, whether, such being the commercial state of this country, its judicial establishments, devised in and calculated for a very different state of things, can continue unaltered. It is clear that they cannot; and it is for the lawyers, not attempting to resist a movement which is irresistible, to attempt to do that which may be done, viz. to regulate its course.

It is not unimportant to the public, that, in matters of legal reform, the Profession should, instead of opposing them, take an interest in their success, and take part in the arrangement of their principles and details. And as it is not to be expected that men, in any profession, should take an interest in and facilitate the destruction of a system which they think favourable to their interests, if they think they can stay such destruction, it is not unimportant, for the interests of both the Profession and the public, that the Profession should look at this question in what we humbly conceive is its true light, viz. that to sustain the actual system of administering law for demands above 20*l*. and under 50*l*. is impossible. To remodel it, either by simplification of procedure in the superior courts, or by giving a jurisdiction to the county courts, accompanied with such wholesome regulations as may enable the public to have good law as well as speedy law in those courts, may be possible, if the Profession will, at this juncture, stand forward to lead, not to obstruct, the reform.

Now, if we had been asked to contrive something which would, while benefiting the public, repair to the Profession the damage done to it by the establishment of the county courts, we should have said, "Extend the jurisdiction of the county courts; extend it to that point where the pressure of the heavy expense of proceeding in the superior courts makes actions at law so onerous—so certain to produce, in all but a few quite exceptional cases, loss to the winning side, that no man is more than once so foolish as to bring an action."

Mr. Amos, in the pamphlet to which we referred last week, mentions two cases, which we will quote in his own words:—

"The author wrote to a friend, whom he knew to have been recently a successful defendant in an action brought against him to recover 42*l*., desiring particulars of his costs. The question in dispute was, whether the plaintiff had or had not sold to the defendant a certain quantity of a chemical preparation. The gentleman replied, that his own taxed costs (which the plaintiff paid) were 80*l*., and his extra costs (which he, the successful defendant, paid) were 67*l*. The result of this suit illustrates a passage in Juvenal, descriptive of the termination of the suit of Stoily v. Verres:—

'At tu, victrix Provincia, ploras.'

"The author's friend writes, that he was afterwards told by the plaintiff, (probably the parties to the suit were restored to amity by their common misfortune), that the law-suit cost him 300*l*. And he concludes his letter by observing, 'It is clear that a victory so dearly purchased would make me hesitate about appealing to a remedy so costly as the law, should a similar imposition be attempted again to be practised upon me. You may be certain also of my taking a deep interest in the principle of the county courts being extended to 50*l*., or any larger amount.'

"The reader may be desirous of being furnished with the particulars of the costs, in some very recent case, of a demand between 20*l*. and 50*l*., in which the plaintiff should have succeeded, and which should be of a commonplace description. The author is enabled to state the following circumstances relative to an action for the bill of a surgeon and apothecary, who sued his patient for 42*l*.:—The defendant paid 25*l*. into court, which had been previously tendered; and thus the sum in dispute was reduced to 17*l*. The plaintiff called eleven witnesses, and the defendant four. Nearly all, if not quite all, these witnesses would have been dispensed with had the parties to the suit been examinable; nor would either of these parties have hesitated for a moment to abide by the other's statement of the facts within his knowledge. The jury, after a noisy altercation for two hours, found that 40*l*. was due to the plaintiff, and that 25*l*. had been tendered. The medicines supplied amounted to 3*l*. 6*s*. 6*d*. The plaintiff's charge was at the rate of 1*l*. 1*s*. a visit, which the jury allowed, striking off 2*l*. from the total, for reasons best known in the jury-room. The defendant contended that 5*s*. a visit, and medicine extra, or 7*s*. 6*d*., and at most 10*s*. 6*d*. a visit, was the proper and usual charge of a general practitioner. The costs were taxed the day before this page is written. The plaintiff proved, on oath, costs to the amount of 158*l*. 1*s*. 3*d*. After a hard struggle in the Master's office, these costs were taxed at 103*l*. 1*s*. 7*d*., thus leaving the plaintiff to pay 55*l*. 0*s*. 2*d*. on the issue found for him. On the issue of a tender, the costs taxed for the defendant were 4*l*. 11*s*.; so that the plaintiff lost, upon this calculation, 59*l*. 11*s*. 2*d*. He recovered 40*l*., 25*l*. of which he might have had without litigation; so that, on the whole, his ascertained loss on gaining the cause was 19*l*. 11*s*. 2*d*.; besides which, the loss by extra costs between attorney and client must be added; making it probable that this conqueror paid more than thrice what he received from his fallen adversary."

Now, these are not exceptional, they are every-day cases; and it is wholly absurd to call an administration of law, which cannot be had except on such terms, an administration of justice. It is a judicial interference with private vengeance, and scarcely anything more; but justice it is not, in any practical and commercial sense. Hence the imperative cry of the public for a different procedure.

With regard to demands extending to the sum of 50*l*., as that is really a considerable amount, commercially speaking, and an amount frequently secured, or intended to be secured, by legal contracts or customs involving difficult questions, it is no doubt desirable that such cases should be conducted by educated lawyers; and the presence of a Bar, and of attorneys of the higher class, should be, for the benefit of the public, secured, or at least accessible. Any fear, if such regulations are made as to justify parties in employing counsel and educated attorneys, that the extension of the county court jurisdiction to 50*l*. will destroy, or even injure, the business of professional men, we hold to be quite chimerical. The business now done in the superior courts will be transferred, and a great deal more will be added. The mode of transacting business may be altered; it may be necessary for the junior Bar, or a junior portion of it, to make frequent journeys, upon circuits to be selected; it may be that each county will claim its provincial Bar—its provincial attorneys; but such changes, if they take place, are changes of mode of existence, not of existence itself—changes in the mode and place of conducting business, not in the amount of business done; and, so far from such a transfer of jurisdiction diminishing the actual amount of professional employment, we prophesy, with the utmost confidence, that it will greatly increase it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, April 9.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

On the second reading of this bill being moved,

Mr. Goulburn said the title of it was, "A Bill for facilitating and better securing the due Administration of Charitable Trusts," but it did not fulfil the object stated in that title. It did not apply itself to the more economical administration of the funds of all charities; it looked only to a particular class of charities—those under 100*l.* annual value, and with respect to those it proposed two new tribunals. The charities above 30*l.* a year and under 100*l.* were to be referred to a separate Master in Chancery. Those under 30*l.* a year were to be referred to the judges of the county courts. But charities above 100*l.* a year required an economical administration as those under that amount, and on that ground alone this bill proceeded altogether on error. The House must observe, that charities of small amount involved principles of property as sacred as those of the largest, and in their respective localities they operated to influence most materially the happiness and comfort of those persons who were within the range of them. Now, this bill proposed to deal with no less than 4600 charities of that description, and to transfer the power over them to the judges of the county courts. That power, hitherto vested entirely in the Lord Chancellor—a judge who, from his eminent position, and attended by a learned Bar, had every motive for acting on just principles—it was proposed to transfer to a county court judge, sitting with no Bar of any importance before him, the affairs he managed only known to persons who resided in the neighbourhood, and not in a position so eminent as to be free from the suspicion of being influenced by partial feelings. Another evil would be the want of a uniform tenor of decisions. There would be sixty judges, in their separate jurisdictions, dealing with these charities, and the result would be, different decisions of the most important principles, involving these trusts in difficulty and disorder. The proper remedy would be in rendering the Court of Chancery less dilatory and expensive, and not in raising up a separate tribunal, which might, after all, end in the same expense and delay that now beset that court. On these grounds he objected to this bill.

Mr. G. Turner said, it was necessary the House should be fully acquainted with the nature and extent of the charities to which this bill would apply. It proposed to deal with all charities under 100*l.* a year. The number of those charities was nearly 24,000, with an income of 1,000,000*l.* It severed those below 30*l.* a year from those above that amount. The number of those under 30*l.* was between 3000 and 4000, and the income of them between 200,000*l.* and 300,000*l.* They involved every description of trust and trustee. The greatest care was necessary, on the part of the House, to select a tribunal that should be able and willing to deal with the property upon the most fair and just principles. Care should be taken that proper persons were selected as trustees, and the next object was, to meddle with those trustees in their discretion as little as possible, provided that discretion was bona fide exercised. The next object for the Legislature should be, to provide a very speedy and efficient remedy in the event of any abuse of those trusts; and the last was, to take care that no groundless complaints on the subject of them should be encouraged. It unfortunately happened, that when the existing act passed no clause was introduced to prevent any person but the Attorney-General from filing informations in charity cases, and the consequence was, that a speculative attorney, in the neighbourhood of that House, filed informations against half the companies in London, and against a great number of charities throughout the country, and the funds of several charities were altogether exhausted by the litigation which ensued. Bearing that in mind, he had looked anxiously at the provisions of the present bill; and what did he see? Why, that any person was at liberty to file an information, upon obtaining the sanction of the Attorney-General, or of two magistrates at petty sessions. The Attorney-General had no time to bestow upon matters of this kind, and it was notorious that his sanction was given as a matter of course, on application being made for it. In that respect, therefore, the bill provided no security. How, then, would the case stand as regarded the two magistrates at petty sessions? It was easy to conceive how the provision of the bill, which required their sanction as a preliminary to the filing of an information, would work in the case of charities existing in towns throughout the country. In boroughs, where party feeling ran high, parties would easily persuade themselves that their opponents were mismanaging a charity, and they would find little difficulty in finding two magistrates to sanction the filing of an information. The bill proposed to place all charities having a yearly income between 100*l.* and 30*l.* under the jurisdiction of a Master in Chancery, whose decision with respect to them was to be final. Now, it happened that, in the ordinary practice of the Court, parties capable of litigating the decisions of the Masters almost invariably did so by appealing from them to the Court itself. Charities should not be placed in a worse position than private suitors; they ought to have the right of appeal from the Master's decision. The bill provided, that all charities having incomes below 30*l.* a year each should be placed entirely under the jurisdiction of the county courts. To that proposition he had the strongest possible objection. The judges of the county courts were deserving of respect, but, generally speaking, they had not been educated for that branch of the profession which would render them familiar with the principles on which charity cases ought to be decided. The judges of the county courts were not resident in the localities in which they exercised jurisdiction, and therefore they could have no personal knowledge of the persons in those localities best fitted to administer charities. They must take their information on this point from their clerks, who thus would acquire control over a large number of the charities of the kingdom. The clerks of the county courts were usually attorneys practising in the towns in which the courts were held; and country attorneys, it was well known, took an active part in every election. It was to be feared, that, by the working of this provision of the bill, the decisions of the county court judges in their own courts would come to be looked upon with suspicion, as biased by party considerations. But the jurisdiction of the county courts would not be limited solely to charities below 30*l.* a year; for by one of the clauses of the bill the Lord Chancellor was empowered to refer to them charities of 100*l.* a year, and thus those courts might be called on to adjudicate in the cases of Rugby, Eton, and Harrow. Having pointed out what he conceived to be the objections to the measure, he might be asked what jurisdiction he would himself subject charities to. He concurred with the right hon. member for the University of Cambridge in thinking, that, if the evils of the Court of Chancery were removed, it would be easy to find in that court an efficient tribunal for administering charities. If the Legislature would give a judge in Chancery permission to sit in chambers, like a judge at common law, and to summon before him only such witnesses as he might deem necessary, charity cases would be decided more safely and more beneficially than by a judge of a county court or a Master in Chancery. But if that suggestion should not be approved of, the Legislature might avail itself of the services of the commissioners of bankrupts, who were locally resident in their several jurisdictions, and were for the most part gentlemen who had been connected with the equity courts.

The Solicitor-General said, it was admitted that the aggregate income of charities below 30*l.* each amounted to 300,000*l.*, and yet in every case a breach of trust might be committed with impunity, because the remedy was so expensive that no prudent person would seek it. It was necessary to correct an evil of such magnitude. But then it was urged that the best remedy would be found in a complete reform of the Court of Chancery. That proposition he was not, at present, disposed to dispute; but he asked, how near were they to the accomplishment of the desired reform of the Court of Chancery? The reforms now under the consideration of the House were chiefly experimental. It would be necessary to watch their progress, and to correct them from time to time, if necessary. A complete reform of the Chancery Court could not be accomplished very soon; and was nothing to be done in the meantime? When the Court should be reformed, the jurisdiction now proposed to be severed from it could be restored. The learned member then proceeded to defend the bill on the various points objected to.

Mr. Roundell Palmer said, the great practical necessity for legislation, he would venture to say, had reference not so much to cases of supposed or actual breach of trust in small charities, as to the very numerous instances of their administrative wants, which, in the present very imperfect state of the law, could not be supplied without the Court of Chancery. Take, for example, the appointment of new trustees—the most simple and often the most necessary thing in the world. One would suppose that there would be an equally simple, straightforward, and obvious way of doing it; but the only mode was by the costly machinery of a petition to the Court of Chancery, reference to the Master, a return to the Court to be confirmed, and, possibly, further questions arising out of the subject. Again, the taking and publication of accounts was an important matter; so also was the power of re-leasing when the estates of a charity required to be let; and the case where the funds of a small charity had so increased that it would be possible to extend the basis of the foundation consistently with the wishes of the founder. All these were administrative objects, and it was for the sake of those objects that the intervention of the Legislature was necessary. All that, however, might be supplied by the present bill without entangling themselves in any of the difficulties which arose immediately they attempted to supply the same mode of summary jurisdiction in those difficult contentious cases which would arise in small charities as well as great. It was, he thought, worthy of consideration, whether it would not be better, in the first instance, to pass a bill which should provide a cheap, simple, and effectual mode of supplying the ordinary administrative wants of charities, whilst they reserved the consideration of that contentious part of the jurisdiction until they should be able to deal with the general subject of Chancery reform, in connexion with which it really required very much to be considered. Another point of first-rate importance, on which, as it appeared to him, this bill was open to grave exception, was that of appeal. It seemed to him that the House should pause before it extended the principle of giving judges, who were to be appealed from, the right of determining whether or not an appeal should lie from their decision. With respect to the Masters in Chancery, they were known so well, and they had before them so many examples, and so large a course of sound and just administration, that he could not doubt that, as a matter of course, they would allow an appeal in every case whenever it was asked; but that principle was now proposed to be extended still further with respect to the judges of the county courts, and they gave to those judges the power of removing the most respectable persons in the neighbourhood—the clergy of the parish, county magistrates, and gentlemen of that standing—from the office of trustees, and of refusing to give them an appeal; and further, if they allowed an appeal, it was proposed that the case should go to the court above upon his statement of the facts of the case, as he had derived them from the evidence.

Mr. Aglionby said, the country did not like the Court of Chancery, and the best feature of this bill was, that it sheared that court of a considerable portion of its practice, and vested it in bodies in which the country would have more confidence. There was no tribunal which gave less satisfaction than the Court of Chancery, unless it were that of the Masters in Chancery. For himself, he would much prefer that cases between 30*l.* and 100*l.* should be vested in the county court judges, rather than in the Masters in Chancery.

The bill was read a second time.

GRAY'S INN.—A notice has been issued (with the sanction of the Benchers) that there will be a voluntary Examination for Honours in the Laws of Real Property, in the Hall of this Society, in Trinity Term, namely, on Thursday and Friday, the 23rd and 24th days of May next, commencing at ten o'clock A.M. on each day. All students for the Bar, members of any inn of court, will be qualified to attend and stand on this occasion. The names of the successful candidates alone will appear in the published Class List, so that those who do not go in for honours, or who do not succeed, will not suffer any prejudice. The gentleman who attains the first place in the list (being of merit not inadequate, in the opinion of the Examiners, to entitle him to that distinction) will receive the "Lectures Prize," consisting of a set of the Reports of Vesey, jun., (20 vols.)

Mr. Bowyer, D.C.L., will deliver the Readings for the ensuing (Easter) Term in the Middle Temple Hall, on the four Wednesdays in Term, at a quarter after seven o'clock.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any Station, and of EVERY AGE.

BONUSES.

The two First Divisions averaged 22l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid; the Third, 28l. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the security and benefit of the ASSURED exceeds SIX HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND POUNDS; and the Income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of 127,000l. per annum.

The Balance Sheets of this Society (containing every item of Receipt and Expenditure) are at all times open for the inspection of any of the ASSURED.

LONDON, APRIL 20, 1850.

THE important maxim, "Omnis rati habitio retrahitur et mandato priori equiparatur," in its application to actions of tort, has been fully considered in the recent case of Bird v. Brown, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 132). The facts of that case were the following:—A merchant in America shipped certain goods to the account of merchants in this country, against whom a fiat in bankruptcy issued on the 8th May. On the arrival of the cargoes on the 5th, 7th, and 9th May, the defendants, during the continuance of the transitus, gave notice to the master and consignees of a claim to stop the goods in transitu on behalf of the American merchant, but they were not his agents, nor had they received any authority from him to make the stoppage. On the 11th May, the plaintiffs, the assignees of the bankrupts, demanded from the master and consignees the cargoes which were then on board the vessels in port and undelivered, but delivery of them to the plaintiffs was refused, and on the same day they were handed over to the defendants, who on the next day refused to deliver them to the plaintiffs, on demand. The American merchant afterwards, and before the commencement of the action, adopted and ratified the acts of the defendants, and the question was, whether such ratification were equivalent to a prior authority, so as to afford a defence to an action of trover brought by the assignees against the defendants. The Court of Exchequer held, first, that there could not be any stoppage in transitu after the demand by the plaintiffs on the 11th May, and the subsequent delivery of them to the defendants—the transitus was then at an end; and, secondly, that the ratification after the transitus was ended was too late, and had not the effect of altering the property in the goods, which, at that time, had become vested in the plaintiffs.

The Court were of opinion that the doctrine involved in the maxim cited at the commencement of this article must, to enable the party on whose behalf the act was done, or his agent, to take advantage of it in an action of tort, be understood with this qualification—that the ratification must take place at a time and under circumstances when the ratifying party might himself have lawfully done the act which he ratifies. Lord Audley's case (Cro. Eliz. 561; and see 18 Vin. Ab. 157) was relied upon as supporting this view. There a fine, with proclamations, was levied of certain land, and a stranger, within five years afterwards, in the name of him who had the right, entered to avoid the fine. After the five years, the party having the right to the land ratified and confirmed the act of the stranger. This was held to be inoperative, though such ratification within the five years would probably have been good. The party having title could not be deemed to make an entry until he ratified the previous entry, and he did not do so until it was too late. So, in the principal case, the stoppage could be made only during the transitus; during that period the defendants, without authority, made the stoppage, and it was only after the transitus was ended that their act was ratified. The American merchant, however, at that time, could not stop the goods, and therefore could not ratify.

This decision, it will be seen, prevents the ratification from having a retrospective effect, or being equivalent to a previous command, unless the party ratifying could himself have lawfully performed the act at the time of the ratification: he has, in fact, no authority to give to the party acting, nor power of ratifying the act done. The Court also stated, that, as applied to cases of contract, the maxim is clear, and that if A., unauthorised by B., makes a contract on his behalf with C., which B. afterwards recognises and adopts, the contract is to be dealt with as having been originally made by his authority: that, as applied to cases of tort, where it is sought to fix the party ratifying with liability, if A., professing to act by the authority of B., does that which prima facie amounts to a trespass, and B. afterwards assents to and adopts his act, A. is treated as having from the beginning acted by his authority, and B. becomes a trespasser, unless he can justify the act.

VOL. XIV.

O

THE STAMP-DUTIES BILL.

On Monday last the House of Commons went into committee on this bill in an amended form. Many of the objectionable provisions had been omitted or modified, and further concessions were made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; but upon the committee deciding that the duty on bonds for sums not exceeding 50*l.* should be 1*s.*, the further progress of the bill was suspended until Monday next. It is to be hoped that this decision will not occasion the abandonment of the bill, which, as amended, would effect a vast improvement upon the existing duties.

The principal alterations in the bill since our former notice of it are the following:—

The only persons to be charged as debtors to the Crown with stamp-duties are those by whom the duties ought to be actually paid.

The penalty for stamping executed instruments is to be 10*l.*, and where the duty to be paid exceeds 10*l.*, then, in addition to the 10*l.*, interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the duty, is to be paid "from the date, or first signing or execution of such deed or instrument" [which?], but the total amount of such interest is not to exceed the amount of the principal.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed in committee to authorise the Board of Inland Revenue to decide what stamp ought to be affixed in particular cases, upon payment of a small additional duty for an adjudication stamp.

The proviso in the 7th section, confining the allowance of time for stamping instruments executed abroad to instruments not previously executed by any party within the United Kingdom, was abandoned.

The clause repealing the restriction in the 9 Geo. 4, c. 27, s. 4, on vendors of receipt stamps charging more than the amount of the stamps, was struck out. The allowance of unlimited charges for receipt stamps is, no doubt, objectionable, but some more liberal discount than is at present made to vendors of stamps is absolutely necessary.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer promised to consider a proposition made by Mr. Mullings, that the progressive duty on agreements should be 2*s.* 6*d.*

A clause was introduced for making fire insurance licenses in Ireland permanent.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed to reduce the duty on bonds, mortgages, and other securities for money, from 10*s.* per cent. to 5*s.* per cent.; and the amendment moved by Sir H. Willoughby, that on bonds not exceeding 50*l.* the duty should be 1*s.*, was adopted.

The lowest stamp on an annuity bond is still 1*l.*

In the amended bill, the objectionable words, "or of any other matter or thing whatever, and of whatever nature," under the titles Conveyances and Mortgages, have been omitted, and the language of the old schedule restored.

A stamp of 2*s.* 6*d.* is proposed on the counterpart or duplicate of a conveyance made in consideration wholly of an annuity. This seems capricious, and likely to lead to evasion.

The stamps on admittances to copyholds sold or mortgaged are reduced to the ad valorem stamp, where that is under 1*l.*

The blunder in charging money covenants with the like duties as bonds for the same purpose, without providing, in cases where the sums secured are indefinite, a substitute for the provision, under the title "Bonds," that the penalty shall determine the stamp, is not corrected.

The proposed duties on leases are, for a rent not exceeding 5 l.			£0 0 6
Exceeding 5 l. , and not exceeding 10 l.			0 1 0

The duty on memorials of conveyances, &c., is reduced to the ad valorem duty, where that is less than 10*s.*

The words imposing the mortgage-duty on agreements, &c., accompanying deposit securities, are, in the amended bill, the same as the words in the existing Stamp Act.

The special proviso, limiting the effect by relation of a stamp impressed after execution, on a mortgage for an unlimited amount, to the day of impressing such stamp, (the transitory appearance of which has been useful, as illustrating the unbounded impudence of the Stamp-office authorities), is omitted.

The following clause is inserted:—

MORTGAGES. "And where any such deed, &c. shall be made respectively as a security for the payment of any rent-charge or annuity, or any sum or sum of money, by way of repayment, or in satisfaction or discharge, or in redemption of any sum of money lent, advanced, or paid as, or for, or in the nature of a loan intended to be repaid, satisfied, discharged, or redeemed in manner aforesaid—the same duty as on a mortgage or warrant for the sum of money so lent, advanced, or paid."

The duty on transfers of mortgages is reduced to the ad valorem duty, where that is under 1*l.* 15*s.*; but this is effected by a reference to the amount secured (300*l.*), instead of to the amount of duty, so that any change in the rate of the ad valorem duty will necessitate a correction of the clause.

No deed of transfer is to be charged with additional duty by reason of its containing any covenant for payment by the original mortgagor, or any person interested in the equity of redemption, or a new proviso for redemption, or a power of sale. This is a very imperfect mode of overruling the absurd decisions which have been made on this subject. Its effect would be to prevent the Courts from overruling the principle of those decisions, which they may still be expected to do. It does not extend to covenants for title, to a power to distrain for interest, to a power to lease, nor to a thousand other variations that might be made in the form of the original security. No enumeration of particulars would be sufficient, unless these words be added—"or any other matter which might have been inserted in the original mortgage, without rendering it liable to any additional stamp."

The duty on further securities for mortgage debts is reduced to the ad valorem duty, where that is under 1*l.* 15*s.*, (or, as the bill has it, where the sum secured does not exceed 300*l.*) But the corresponding head in the old Stamp Act is not included in Schedule (A).

The bill is to repeal the old duties only as to instruments which shall have been signed or executed by any party, or which shall bear date, before or on the 5th July, 1850. Why the alternative? Will a deed actually ingrossed and executed a year after that day, but dated in 1849, be liable to the old duties? It will be liable to the new duties by the express terms of the 2nd section, "that from and after the said 5th day of July, 1850, there shall be paid" &c. In sect. 4, which repeals the lease for a year duty, the expressed date alone is made the criterion.

The grave discussions of Monday last on the details of a system of taxes which ought never to have been imposed, and which can never be satisfactorily dealt with otherwise than by total repeal, brought out many of the glaring inequalities and absurdities of the stamp-duties.

The existence of these monstrous impediments to free action would be incredible, if we did not know how mean and insignificant was their origin, and how much may be done by slow and steady encroachment. The first stamp-duties were granted in the year 1694, for four years, "towards carrying on the war against France," and with few exceptions they ranged between 1d. and 6d. on the several documents charged. It is worth while to consider somewhat minutely the nature and amount of a few of the items in the existing table of duties, bearing in mind that the theory of the stamp-duties is, that they are ordinary taxes for the purposes of revenue, i. e. contributions to be paid to the Government by its subjects, in proportion to their several means, and in consideration of its services in protecting their lives, liberty, and property, and doing what a Government can do towards facilitating the common business and enjoyment of its subjects.

The first charge in the list is one of 50*l.* on admissions to the degree of advocate or barrister—levied on those to die the next week after their admission, and on those who pine in briefless penury equally with those who eventually realise incomes out of which they could with ease pay a hundredfold the duty which presses so hardly on their unfledged brethren. There are similar charges on admissions to some other professional degrees and offices—none on the privilege to undertake the much less hazardous, and commonly more profitable, callings of bakers, tailors, dentists, merchants, &c. Then we have charges on university honours, and on admissions to municipal corporations. If a man has occasion for the evidence of a witness in a court of law or equity, and the evidence is given orally, no tax is paid; if it is given in writing, the tax is 2*s.* 6*d.*; but if it is given in an ecclesiastical court, 5*s.* must be paid. Parties who enter into an agreement in writing, where the value of the subject-matter is 20*l.*, must pay 2*s.* 6*d.*; and they pay the same if the value of the subject-matter is a million. But if, in either case, they cannot succeed in expressing their meaning by fewer than 1081 words, or if they wish to give to their agreement a specially binding operation, they must pay 35*s.* at the least. If, however, the agreement relates to the sale of "goods, wares, and merchandises," to any amount, it is exempt from duty. If a man wishes to give moveable goods to another, he may do so free of duty; but if he is inclined to make a gratuitous conveyance of land, in the form of a bargain and sale, for a nominal consideration, he must pay 5*l.*, although, had a few talismanic words been inserted in the deed under which he derives his title, he might have got off for 35*s.* If a man buys goods to any amount, he pays no duty; if he buys leaseholds for 10*l.*, he pays a duty of 1*l.*; but if the tenure happens to be freehold, the value being the same, he pays 2*l.*; and if a complicated title, after putting him to great expense in the investigation, obliges him to have a long conveyance, or several deeds instead of one, he may have to pay four or five times that sum. If a man, being of good credit, borrows 1000*l.* on his promissory-note, he pays 8*s.* 6*d.*; but if, being a poor devil on the brink of ruin, he is obliged to mortgage his only estate for the same sum, he pays 5*l.*, which, in case of insolvency, is, in fact, paid by his defrauded creditors; and if, having mortgaged one estate, he obtains another, and throws it in as a further security, to stop a foreclosure or sale, he pays 1*l.* 15*s.*; but if his heir does the same thing, he must pay 5*l.* If a man, who has occasion for 10,000*l.*, is possessed of unincumbered estates of three times the value, he sends a bundle of title-deeds to his banker and draws for the amount, free of duty; but if his estates are barely worth that sum, he must give a formal mortgage, with powers of sale, bearing stamps to the amount of 15*l.* or 16*l.* A settlement of 15,000*l.* in money pays 20*l.*; a settlement of a whole county of real estate may be effected for 1*l.* 15*s.* A tradesman, whose bills are settled in sums exceeding 5*l.*, pays a large annual tax for receipts; one who takes money to ten times the annual amount, in dribblets under 5*l.*, pays nothing for receipts; and barristers and physicians are equally exempt from that tax. If a man pays a debt without a witness, and takes a receipt which is not properly stamped, he may thank the honesty of his creditor if he is not made to pay it over again. If, by neglect or error, a deed executed twenty years ago was insufficiently stamped, the effect may be, (and daily is), that, on the trial of an action, the rightful claimant is defeated, and has to pay all the costs of unsuccessfully seeking to recover his own property. Receipts, bills of exchange, and promissory-notes cannot be stamped after execution; and other instruments, if a year has elapsed, are stamped only on payment of a heavy penalty. Of all dishonest defences, those founded on the insufficiency of stamps are the most frequent. Lastly, in the thousand transactions in which no pecuniary consideration appears, and which are, therefore, not subject to any ad valorem duty, but which require to be evidenced by deed, a uniform stamp of 1*l.* 15*s.*, with a progressive duty of 1*l.* 5*s.*, is imposed, whether the subject-matter is an adjustment of a transaction involving loss to all parties concerned, or is a beneficial arrangement of interests to the value of several millions.

Such are some of the features of a tax which, in theory, as we have said, is a contribution by every man, in proportion to his means, to a government, whose first duty is to administer justice freely, and to remove obstacles in the way of the various useful or harmless pursuits of its subjects. If the attention of the public were directed to the working of this most clumsy and pernicious impost, the contrivance of which would disgrace a South Sea islander, it would not be allowed longer to oppress the needy, to fetter the daily business of life, and to encourage fraud.

The interests of the Profession and of the public equally demand a total repeal of these duties, and a substitution (for want of a better tax) of an equivalent percentage on property and income. The unpopularity of the income-tax cannot extend to such a measure, because it would be a simple addition to a comparatively just charge, in lieu of a most odious and vexatious one. And if it is hoped that the income-tax may one day be abolished, the same source of income that will be provided in lieu of the existing tax will furnish a substitute for the proposed addition to it.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Charles Hodgson, of Selby, Yorkshire; John George Brown, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—The projected extension of these courts to 50*l* necessarily draws attention to the working of the system at present in existence; and, notwithstanding the well-deserved praise which has been accorded to the general principle of speedy and cheap justice, there is in the commercial community much and well-founded alarm at the manner in which that principle has been carried out.

The county courts have been called by their opponents "plaintiffs' courts;" this is a misnomer. By the mode in which their jurisdiction has been exercised, they are much more entitled to the appellation of "defendants' courts."

In legislating on the subject of the recovery of debts, it should be remembered, (but seems very generally to be forgotten), that in the vast majority of cases there is, in reality, no dispute as to the amount which the plaintiff claims to be due and the defendant owes, the cause of proceedings being either the unwillingness or inability to pay.

The general complaint against the superior courts is not only the expensive course of procedure before a judgment can be obtained, but the facilities which a knavish defendant possesses of postponing that evil day—the day of payment. But with all the vexations to which a plaintiff is exposed by proceeding in the superior courts, when he does obtain judgment it is absolute and unfettered. Not so in the county courts; there, when he commences proceedings, he may be kept waiting from three to six or even eight weeks before the cause is heard; he is then to go prepared to prove his case in a legal manner, whether his demand be disputed or not; and when he has proved it, and shewn, that, prior to instituting his suit, he was entitled to immediate payment from the defendant, instead of obtaining a judgment to that effect, the court interposes, and grants the defendant any time it pleases for payment, either by instalments or otherwise; and a plaintiff is exposed to more trouble and vexation in seeking to enforce the judgment pronounced in his favour, than he has previously been to obtain it.

It appears to me, Sir, that this interference with the contracts of parties is wrong in principle, and it certainly leads to very great vexation and injustice in practice. When A. has made a contract with B., that A. will pay B. a certain sum of money on a certain day, on what principle of justice can any court interfere to vary the contract between them? The court has properly to inquire what was the contract between A. and B., but when that has been judicially ascertained, I submit it ought not to interfere to alter that contract in favour of the defaulting party. It will be said, that it is for the benefit of the plaintiff that the court grants a defendant time to pay by instalments, or otherwise. To this I answer, that plaintiffs are the best judges of any benefit to themselves, and that, if they think they will be better off by shewing indulgence, they will of their own accord grant it. Practically, such interference with the rights of plaintiffs has been attended with great injustice. It gives a fraudulent defendant an opportunity to make away with his available property for his own benefit, or that of a favoured creditor. Unless there be a legal state of insolvency, in which the assets of a debtor are taken into the custody of the law, to be administered equally for the benefit of his creditors, the interference with the contracts between debtor and creditor is an unwarrantable jurisdiction, exercised at the caprice of a court, which can have no proper means of telling whether it is or is not opening the door to fraud and injustice. The introduction of this principle from the courts of requests to the county courts is, therefore, making the latter courts partial courts of insolvency, without the adequate means of securing the benefit of an equal dividend to the unfortunate creditor.

The principle against which I am contending is not recognised by the superior Courts; if it be a just one, it clearly is as applicable to debts of large as to those of small amounts—to 5000*l*. as well as to 50*l*. or to 5*l*.; yet if, in an action in one of the superior courts, a defendant applies to a judge to stay proceedings, on payment of the debt and costs at a future day, or by instalments, he is told by the judge, "Unless the plaintiff consents, I have no jurisdiction, and your application is dismissed." Why should such a jurisdiction be intrusted to the judges of the county courts, and not to the judges of the superior courts? This anomaly, in truth, now actually exists—that if A. has two debts of 5*l*. each owing to him, one from B., who lives within twenty miles of him, and which must be sued for in the county court, and another from C., who lives more than twenty miles from him, and may be recovered in the superior court, in the case against B., A. recovers a judgment in the county court, which is ordered to be paid by monthly instalments of 5*s*. or 10*s*., whilst in that against C. he recovers judgment and execution for the whole amount at once. And be it observed, that if the defendants in both cases make no defence to the proceedings, the judgment and execution in the superior court is generally obtained in a shorter time than it takes to come to a hearing in the county court.

I cordially agree with the opinion expressed in your valuable journal, that it is necessary to remodel our present system, "either by simplification of procedure in the superior courts, or by giving a jurisdiction to the county courts, accompanied with such wholesome regulations as may enable the public to have good law as well as speedy law in those courts." But I consider the principle to which I have adverted is so vicious, that it is of the utmost importance that the attention of the Profession, the public, and the Legislature should be called to it; and also, that before the jurisdiction of the county courts be hastily extended to larger amounts, diligent inquiry should be made into the practice and proceedings of these courts as at present constituted, which I am quite certain are susceptible of great and needful amendments.

Should you deem this letter worthy of a place in your valuable journal, I may, perhaps, hereafter again trespass on your patience, to endeavour to point out some of the evils which, in my opinion, exist in the practice of the county courts, and the reasons why they have been so very generally shunned by nearly all the members of high standing and character in that branch of the Profession to which I have the honour to belong.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A CITY ATTORNEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—I think it ought to be known to the Profession, that the court of record for the borough of Southwark is still available for the recovery of all debts and damages to any amount arising within the ancient borough of Southwark; that is to say, the five parishes of St. Saviour, (except the Clink Liberty), St. Olave, St. John, St. Thomas, and St. George the Martyr.

The borough court is a court of record by prescription, of which the Recorder of London, as Steward of Southwark, is the judge.

The court days are every Monday, when steps can be taken in actions pending. The proceedings are by plaint, on which a capias issues, returnable on the next court day, when a declaration may be filed de bene esse. The defendant has till the following court day to appear, and another week to plead; and on issue being joined, a week's notice of trial is given. Courts are held periodically before the recorder and a jury.

The following counsel have been appointed by the recorder, viz. Mr. Payne, Mr. Carrington, Mr. Ryland, Mr. Locke, Mr. Edmund Law, Mr. Laurie, Mr. Randall, and Mr. R. J. Corner.

The attorneys' costs on a capias issued and served are 1*l.*, and the costs of a cause tried amount to about 10*l.*

There were formerly only three attorneys entitled to practise in the court, but the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, c. 27, authorises all attorneys of the superior courts at Westminster to practise in courts of inferior jurisdiction, on production of their admissions in the superior courts and their certificates, and on signing the roll. Several gentlemen have availed themselves of this privilege, and been admitted.

As one of the three original attorneys of the court, I have long been desirous that the practice should be thrown open to the Profession, but difficulties presented themselves in departing from the ancient number of attorneys in a prescriptive court, which difficulties the above statute has removed, and the recorder has been pleased to admit all such respectable solicitors as have applied to him, on their giving previous notice of their intention to apply to the ancient attorneys of the court, in order that they may shew cause, if necessary, why the parties applying should not be so admitted.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE R. CORNER,
Prothonotary of the Court.

19, Tooley-street, Southwark,
4th April, 1850.

S. Sweet, 1, Chancery-lane.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 25s. boards.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1839.

COLLYER'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Second Edition, greatly enlarged.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of PARTNERSHIP, (including Partnerships in Mines, Joint-Stock Companies, and Ships) with an Appendix of Forms. By JOHN COLLYER, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. in strong cloth bds. BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICE. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BEEK of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of these Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BEEK; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superceding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Note.

PALEY ON SUMMARY CONVICTIONS.

The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported cases; the Statutes to the present time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Self's Life.

LONDON, APRIL 27, 1850.

THE revolution in the Court of Chancery has begun in earnest. This week are published the New Orders, and we think we may say, without fear of exaggeration, that they do not trifle with the subject. The change that they positively and immediately effect is great; the changes of which they are the forerunners may be still more vast and important.

The Orders do not in terms apply to any but suits of a special class, viz. those enumerated in the 1st Order, which do not include what are generally termed contested suits. For instance, they do not expressly apply to a suit for setting aside a fraudulent conveyance; for fixing a trustee with a breach of trust; for enforcing the performance of a parliamentary or other contract, not being a contract for the sale or purchase of land; for restraining the infringement of a patent, or any other legal right; for rectifying a settlement, &c.; nor for construing a written instrument, when the construction of such instrument is really the only thing that the parties desire. Neither are the Orders absolutely imperative, even with reference to the subjects enumerated in the 1st Order. But there are two most material Orders, viz. the 6th and the 32nd, the last of which, in effect, makes the adoption of the mode of proceeding prescribed by the Orders compulsory for all the subjects comprised in the 1st Order; and the first of which (the 6th) will, we apprehend, indirectly compel a resort to the new mode of proceeding in all but a very small number of excepted cases. For, first, with regard to the 32nd Order, no person will be likely to be advised to take the risk of paying the extra costs consequent on a proceeding by bill and answer, if it is at all possible to bring his case within the New Orders; and, secondly, with regard to the 6th Order, it is probable that not only will plaintiffs be desirous of availing themselves of the new mode of proceeding, if possible, although the case may not be one of those named in the 1st Order, but that, although not expressly required to do so, the Court will, if the old procedure be adopted, have regard, in directing costs, to the question whether the new procedure might not have been properly adopted if rights only, and not costs, had been the object.

Nor do we see that, in a great majority of suits, there will be great difficulty in adapting, under the sanction of the 6th Order, the new procedure to cases not expressly comprised in the 1st Order and Schedule (A.)

Take, for instance, such a case as Gibson v. Russell, (2 Y. & C. 104)—a good sample of a suit for setting aside a conveyance, on the ground of fraud and undue influence.

Now, adopting the principle of the forms of claims contained in Schedule (A.), the claim in such a case would be, that the plaintiff's ancestor had conveyed certain property by a certain deed (referring to, but not setting it out) to the defendant; that, in reality, no money had been paid; that the grantor was, at the time of the conveyance, old and infirm, and had been deluded or unduly pressed into making a gift, purporting to be a sale; and claiming that the deed should be set aside and delivered up. On this the defendant would, at the time fixed for shewing cause, do so, on an affidavit stating his grounds of defence; and thereupon it may be presumed, that the Court might, under the 13th Order, either direct evidence to be gone into, or the defendant to be examined on interrogatories, or such other proceedings as it should deem requisite for ascertaining the plaintiff's title to relief; and, these things being done, the cause would then come on for argument in the usual way.

Whether it is expected that the New Orders will be applied in this mode, we are, of course, uninformed; but it appears to us, that they are certainly susceptible of being so applied, to some considerable extent.

Of their precise operation, in reference to the subjects to which they expressly apply, it is difficult to form an opinion, and we shall at present offer none, except that it may be confidently anticipated that they will very materially expedite and cheapen Chancery proceedings, and that they will, probably, make a great change in the nature of the professional occupations of junior counsel at the Chancery Bar. Great quantities of mere writing, untinged by any intellectual colouring, will obviously be annihilated; also many briefs, which, if they required reading, did not at any rate require thinking, will be of the things that have been. The function of the junior Bar will be less that of the draftsman, and more that of the advocate. As regards Chancery solicitors, there is strong ground for anticipating that the effect of the new mode of proceeding will be greatly to increase the amount of that class of business which is peculiarly in their department. But whatever may be the influence of the New Orders on the occupations of both branches of the Profession, we hope and believe it will be their pleasure, as it will unquestionably be their duty, to do all in their power to aid the Court in making them work beneficially.

Correspondence.

COUNTY COURTS AND COMMON LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

Sir,—As it seems particularly desirable now to hear the views of the Profession on the above subject, I have troubled you with the following.

My remarks apply to England generally, but, for the purpose of illustration, I take one county, namely, Essex, and its ten districts.

Each of the ten districts has a separate assistant clerk and office, (the office being the clerk's office of the attorney hereinafter mentioned), and a judge, who, though county court judge of Essex, sits by virtue of ten different appointments, and the chief clerk the same, and the powers of the judge in the district cease when he vacates his seat, and remain in abeyance until he again makes his monthly circuit. The duties of the chief clerk (with the exception of attending the court sittings) are mainly performed by ten practising attorneys.

Suppose the debtor to reside within the district assigned to the Halsted Court, or to Braintree or Rochford District Court, and the creditor to reside at Chelmsford or Maldon—first, the creditor must go or send to Halsted or Braintree, as the case may be, for his plaint, for which he has no allowance; secondly, he must attend the hearing—for his journey thither to prove his case, if a plaintiff, there is no allowance, either for him or his attorney; thirdly, in order to issue execution—which is not done without the order to pay being previously served—he must go or send to Halsted or Braintree, as the case may be, to ascertain whether the money is paid in, for which there is no allowance; and, fourthly, after issuing the execution, he must attend personally, or send, if he employed an attorney, to receive the proceeds of his judgment, and for which there is no allowance. Nay, more; on receiving his money out of court, he is charged with a receipt stamp on the amount of the total sum received under the judgment, and not on the amount claimed, and which generally requires a stamp of less amount than the amount of the judgment. These are his new extra costs.

There ought to have been, where counties have been thus subdivided, an office through which plaints might be issued, and forwarded to the districts for hearing, and at which instructions for executions might be given, and to which the money levied might be forwarded. The objection of the officers to this plan, that it would withdraw the fees from the subdivision courts, is not well founded. The country is dotted with local district courts, the fees of which, in Essex, do not, in any one of the district courts, pay the salaries of the assistant clerks, and some not even the wages of the clerk who fills up the summons and enters the plaint. The offices would probably be vacant, were it not that these clerks are hoping for extended jurisdiction.

Before the courts are extended, subject to the above observation as to the necessity, in each county, of one central office at least*, I would suggest that the Government should furnish returns of all the summonses on which any excess above 20*l.* has been abandoned; that in cases above 20*l.* a jury should consist of twelve, and not five, persons; that the testimony of the wives of plaintiffs and defendants in all cases be excluded; and that in actions for tort the evidence of the parties be altogether excluded.

As to the law of debtor and creditor, as administered by the superior Courts, it is defective in this—that a defendant can, by entering an appearance, make his creditor go to trial if he wishes to get judgment. The remedy is, no appearance, without recognizances and sureties. Another defect exists in enabling debtors to go through the Insolvent Debtors Court, for the express purpose, in 99 out of every 100 cases, of cheating their creditors. The remedy the public seek is by extending the jurisdiction of the county courts, thereby preventing creditors, friendly or otherwise, taking their debtors to prison, and having any control over their person, which they now have, even after sentence of remand of the Insolvent Court, unless the creditor can lodge a detainer in time to prevent the friendly discharge; and, instead thereof, giving the creditor the benefit of applying to the judge of a county court, who will take care, by large or small payments, to compel the debtor to do something to pay his debts†.

Another defect is the allowing a debtor to defeat his creditor by a fictitious transfer of his business; the remedy is to make it a misdemeanour to do so, the judge of the county court to be the sole judge of the fact, and in no instance to permit transfers of personality, except by bill of sale, registered in the county court: such bill not to have any greater legal effect thereby, but to be void unless registered.

Yours obediently,

A COUNTRY ATTORNEY.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

EASTER TERM.—13 VICTORIA.—April 26, 1850.

This Court will, on Thursday the 9th, Friday the 10th, and Saturday the 11th days of May next, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of business then pending and undecided. BY THE COURT.

The motion In re Barber (part heard) will be the only business taken at the sittings after term.

* Our correspondent surely does not expect any great advantage from one central office for the purpose he suggests. Each district office ought to conduct the correspondence with the others.

† We think that our correspondent's remedy would be worse than the disease.

ORDER OF COURT.

The Right Hon. CHARLES CHRISTOPHER LORD COTENHAM, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. HENRY LORD LANGDALE, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. Sir LANCELOT SHADWELL, Vice-Chancellor of England, the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, and the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES WIGRAM, doth hereby, in pursuance of an act of Parliament passed in the fourth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery," and of an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the Fourth Year of the Reign of her present Majesty, intituled 'An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery,'" and of an act passed in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for amending certain Acts of the Fourth and Fifth Years of the Reign of her Majesty, for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery, and for providing for the Discharge of the Duties of the Subpoena-office after the Death, Resignation, or Removal of the present Patentee of that Office," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, ORDER and DIRECT, that all and every the rules, orders, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY, viz.—

I. Any person seeking equitable relief may, without special leave of the Court, and instead of proceeding by bill of complaint in the usual form, file a claim in the Record and Writ Clerks' Office, in any of the following cases—that is to say, in any case where the plaintiff is or claims to be,

1. A creditor upon the estate of any deceased person, seeking payment of his debt out of the deceased's personal assets.
2. A legatee under the will of any deceased person, seeking payment or delivery of his legacy out of the deceased's personal assets.
3. A residuary legatee, or one of the residuary legatees, of any deceased person, seeking an account of the residue, and payment or appropriation of his share therein.
4. The person or any of the persons entitled to the personal estate of any person who may have died intestate, and seeking an account of such personal estate, and payment of his share thereof.
5. An executor or administrator of any deceased person, seeking to have the personal estate of such deceased person administered under the directions of the Court.
6. A legal or equitable mortgagee or person entitled to a lien as security for a debt, seeking foreclosure or sale, or otherwise to enforce his security.
7. A person entitled to redeem any legal or equitable mortgage or any lien, seeking to redeem the same.
8. A person entitled to the specific performance of an agreement for the sale or purchase of any property, seeking such specific performance.
9. A person entitled to an account of the dealings and transactions of a partnership, dissolved or expired, seeking such account.
10. A person entitled to an equitable estate or interest, and seeking to use the name of his trustee in prosecuting an action for his own sole benefit.

11. A person entitled to have a new trustee appointed in a case where there is no power in the instrument creating the trusts to appoint new trustees, or where the power cannot be exercised, and seeking to appoint a new trustee.

II. Such claim in the several cases enumerated in Order I is to be in the form and to the effect set forth in Schedule (A.) hereunder written, as applicable to the particular case, and the filing of such claim is, in all cases not otherwise provided for, to have the force and effect of filing a bill.

III. Every such claim is to be marked at or near the top or upper part thereof, in the same manner as a bill is now marked, with the name of the Lord Chancellor and one of the Vice-Chancellors, or with the name of the Master of the Rolls.

IV. Upon filing such claim, the plaintiff thereby claiming may sue out a writ of summons against the defendant to the claim, requiring him to cause an appearance to be entered to such writ, and also requiring him, on a day or time to be therein named, or on the seal or motion day then next following, to shew cause, if he can, why such relief as is claimed by the plaintiff should not be had, or why such order as shall be just, with reference to the claim, should not be made.

V. Such writ of summons is to be in the form and to the effect in that behalf set forth in No. 1 of Schedule (B.) hereunder written, with such variations as circumstances may require, and is to be sealed with the seal of the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs.

VI. In any case other than those enumerated in Order I, or in any case to which the forms set forth in Schedule (A.) are not applicable, the Court (if it shall so think fit) may, upon the ex parte application of any person seeking equitable relief, and upon reading the claim proposed to be filed, give leave to file such claim, and sue out a writ of summons thereon under these Orders; and if such leave be given, an indorsement thereon by the Registrar, upon the proposed claim, shall be a sufficient authority for the Record and Writ Clerk to receive and file such claim.

VII. In the case provided for by the 5th Article of Order I, any one person who, under the 3rd or 4th Article of Order I, might have claimed relief against the executor or administrator of the deceased person whose personal estate is sought to be administered, and the co-executor or co-administrator (if any) of the plaintiff, may be named in the writ of summons as defendants to the suit; and, in the first instance, no other person need be therein named.

VIII. In other cases, the only person who need be named in the writ of summons as defendant to the suit, in the first instance, is the person against whom the relief is directly claimed.

IX. All claims, and all writs, caveats, proceedings, directions, and orders consequent thereon, either before the Court or in the Masters' offices, are to be deemed proceedings, writs, and orders subject to the general rules, orders, and practice of the Court, so far as the same are or may be applicable to each particular case, and consistent with these Orders; and all orders of the Court made in such proceedings are to be enforced in the same manner and by the same process as orders of the Court made in a cause upon bill filed.

X. Writs of summons are, as to the number of defendants to be named therein, as to the mode of service thereof, and as to the time and mode of entering appearances thereto, to be subject to the same rules as writs of subpoena to appear to and answer bills.

XI. The time for shewing cause named in any writ of summons (except a writ of summons to revive or carry on proceedings) is to be fourteen days at the least after service of the writ; but, by consent of the parties, and with the leave of the Court, cause may be shewn on any earlier day.

XII. At the time for shewing cause named in the writ, or on the seal or motion day then next following, or so soon after as the case can be heard, the defendant, having previously appeared, is personally or by counsel to shew cause in court, if he can, (and if necessary by affidavit), why such relief as is claimed by the claim should not be had against him.

XIII. At the time appointed for shewing cause, upon the motion of the plaintiff, and on hearing the claim, and what may be alleged on the part of the defendant, or upon reading a certificate of the appearance being entered by the defendant, or an affidavit of the writ of summons being duly served, the Court may, if it shall think fit, make an order granting or refusing the relief claimed, or directing any accounts or inquiries to be taken or made, or other proceedings to be had, for the purpose of ascertaining the plaintiff's title to the relief claimed; and further, the Court may direct such (if any) persons or classes of persons as it shall think necessary or fit to be summoned or ordered to appear as parties to the claim, or on any proceedings before the Master, with reference to any accounts or inquiries directed to be taken or made, or otherwise.

XIV. Every order to be so made is to have the effect of, and may be enforced as, a decree or decretal order made in a suit commenced by bill, and duly prosecuted to a hearing, according to the present course of the Court.

XV. If, upon the application for any such order, or during any proceedings under any such order when made, it shall appear to the Court that, for the purposes of justice between the parties, it is necessary or expedient that a bill should be filed, the Court may direct or authorise such bill to be filed, subject to such terms as to costs or otherwise as may be thought proper.

XVI. The orders made for granting relief in the several cases to which the forms set forth in Schedule (A.) are applicable may, if the Court thinks fit, be in the form and to the effect set forth in Schedule (C.), as applicable to the particular case, with such variations as circumstances may require.

XVII. Under every order of reference to the Master under these Orders, the Master is, unless the Court otherwise orders, to be at liberty to cause the parties to be examined on interrogatories, and to produce deeds, books, papers, and writings, as he shall think fit, and to cause advertisements for creditors, and if he shall think it necessary, but not otherwise, for heirs and next of kin, or other unascertained persons, and the representatives of such as may be dead, to be published in the usual forms, or otherwise, as the circumstances of the case may require; and in such advertisements to appoint a time within which such persons are to come in and prove their claims, and within which time, unless they so come in, they are to be excluded the benefit of the order; and in taking any account of a deceased's personal estate under any such order of reference, the Master is to inquire and state to the Court what part, if any, of the deceased's personal estate is outstanding or undisposed of, and is also to compute interest on the deceased's debts, as to such of them as carry interest, after the rate they respectively carry, and as to all others, after the rate of 4l. per cent. per annum from the date of the order, and to compute interest on legacies after the rate of 4l. per cent. per annum from the end of one year after the deceased's death, unless any other time of payment or rate of interest is directed by the will, but in that case according to the will; and under every order whereby any property is ordered to be sold with the approbation of the Master, the same is to be sold to the best purchaser that can be got for the same, to be allowed by the Master, wherein all proper parties are to join, as the Master shall direct.

XVIII. If, upon the proceedings before the Master under any such order, it shall appear to the Master that some persons, not already parties, ought to attend, or to be enabled to attend, the proceedings before him, he is to be at liberty to certify the same; and upon the production of such certificate to the Record and Writ Clerk, the plaintiff may sue out a writ of summons requiring the persons named in such certificate to appear to the writ, and such persons are thereupon to be named and treated as defendants to the suit.

XIX. Such writ of summons, under an order or Master's certificate, is to be in the form and to the effect in that behalf set forth in No. 2 of Schedule (B.), with such variations as circumstances may require.

XX. The persons so summoned, having appeared, are to be at liberty to attend, and to be entitled to notice of the proceedings before the Master under the order of reference, subject to such directions as the Master may make in respect thereof.

XXI. Where any proceedings, originally commenced by claim and writ of summons, shall, by the death of parties or otherwise, have become abated or defective for want of parties, and no new relief is sought, a claim to revive or carry on the suit may be filed; and such claim is to be in the form set forth in No. 12 of Schedule (A.).

XXII. The party claiming simply to revive or carry on proceedings may sue out a writ of summons requiring the defendant thereto to appear to the writ, and to shew cause, if he can, why the proceedings should not be revived or carried on.

XXIII. Such writ of summons is to be in the form and to the effect in that behalf set forth in No. 3 of Schedule (B.), with such variations as circumstances may require.

XXIV. If any defendant to any such writ is desirous of shewing cause why the proceedings should not be revived or carried on, he is to appear and to file a caveat against such revivor or carrying on in the Record and Writ Clerk's office, in the form set forth in No. 4 of Schedule (B.), and to give notice thereof in writing to the opposite party. If no such caveat be filed within eight days from the time limited for his appearance to the writ, then at the expiration of such eight days the proceedings are to be revived, and may be carried on without any order for the purpose; and a certificate of the Record and Writ Clerk, that no caveat has been filed within the time limited, is to be a sufficient authority for the Master to proceed. But if any such caveat be filed, the proceedings are not to be revived or carried on without an order to be obtained on motion, of which due notice is to be given.

XXV. Where any further or supplemental relief is sought, and such supplemental relief is such as is provided for in any of the cases enumerated under Order I, a supplemental claim may be filed in such of the forms set forth in Schedule (A.) as is applicable to the case.

XXVI. If such supplemental relief is not such as is provided for by Order XXV, a supplemental claim may be filed, stating shortly the nature of the plaintiff's case, and the supplemental relief claimed, but the leave of the Court is to be obtained previously to the filing thereof, upon an ex parte application for the purpose, in the manner specified in Order VI.

XXVII. A writ of summons may be sued out, and other proceedings may be taken, upon a supplemental claim, in like manner as upon an original claim.

XXVIII. Guardians ad litem to defend may be appointed for infants or persons of weak or unsound mind against whom any writ of summons may have issued under these Orders, in like manner as guardians ad litem to answer and defend are now appointed in suits on bill filed.

XXIX. Any order or proceeding made, or purporting to be made, in pursuance of these Orders, may be discharged, varied, or set aside on motion; and any order for accelerating proceedings may be made by consent.

XXX. Any order of the Master of the Rolls, or of any of the Vice-Chancellors, may be discharged or varied by the Lord Chancellor on motion.

XXXI. If any of the cases enumerated in Order I involve or are attended by such special circumstances, affecting either the estate or the personal conduct of the defendant, as to require special relief, the plaintiff is at liberty to seek his relief by bill, as if these Orders had not been made.

XXXII. If at any time after these Orders come into operation any suit for any of the purposes to which the forms set forth in Schedule (A.) are applicable shall be commenced by bill and prosecuted to a hearing in the usual course, and upon the hearing it shall appear to the Court that an order to the effect of the decree then made, or an order equally beneficial to the plaintiff, might have been obtained upon a proceeding by summons in the manner authorised by these Orders, the Court may order that the increased costs which have been occasioned by the proceeding by bill, beyond the amount of costs which would have been sustained in the proceeding by summons, shall be borne and paid by the plaintiff.

XXXIII. The Record and Writ Clerks are directed to take the following fees:—

1. For filing a claim	£0	5	0
2. For sealing every writ of summons	0	5	0
3. For filing a caveat	0	2	6

For appearances, office copies, certificates, &c., the same fees as directed by the schedules of fees now in force.

The Registrars are directed to take the following fees:—

1. For every order on the hearing of a claim, and on further directions	£2	0	0
2. For every office copy thereof	0	10	0
3. For every order on arguing exceptions	1	0	0
4. For every office copy thereof	0	5	0
5. For every order for transfer out of court, or sale of any sum of Government stock, &c., exceeding 100 l. stock or annuities, and for every order for payment out of court of any annuity or annuities, or of any interest or dividends upon stock or annuities, exceeding in the whole 5 l. per annum	1	10	0
6. For every office copy thereof	0	10	0

For every other order and office copy, the same fees as now received by the Registrars and their clerks under the schedules of fees now in force.

Solicitors are entitled to charge and be allowed the following fees:—

For instructions to sue or defend	£0	6	8
For instructions for every claim	0	13	4
For preparing and filing a claim	2	2	0
For preparing a writ of summons	0	13	4
For each writ after the first	0	6	8
For ingrossing claims and writs, per folio	0	0	6
For parchment: as paid.
For each copy of writ to serve, per folio	0	0	4
For the brief to counsel to move for leave to file claim (exclusive of a copy of the claim for counsel and the Court)	0	10	0
For the brief and instructions to counsel, on the hearing (exclusive of any necessary copies)	1	0	0
For taking instructions to appear, and for entering appearance—
For one or more defendants, if not exceeding three	0	13	4
If exceeding three, and not more than six, an additional sum of	0	6	8
If exceeding six, for every number not exceeding three, an additional sum of ..	0	6	8

For settling minutes, passing and entering order on hearing: the same charges as on a decretal order.

For entering a caveat 0 | 6 | 8 |

For procuring certificate of no caveat 0 | 6 | 8 |

For term fee: as in a suit.

And also all such fees as by the present practice of the Court they are entitled to, save such as are varied or rendered unnecessary by these present Orders.

XXXIV. These Orders shall come into operation on the 22nd day of May, 1850.

XXXV. In these Orders and the Schedules, the following words have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, over and above their several ordinary meanings, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction, viz.—

1. Words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number.
2. Words importing the masculine gender include females.
3. The word "affidavit" includes "affirmation" and "declaration on honour."
4. The word "person" or "party" includes "a body politic or corporate."
5. The word "legacy" includes "an annuity," and "a specific as well as a pecuniary legacy."
6. The word "legatee" includes "a person interested in a legacy."
7. The expression "residuary legatee" includes "a person interested in the residue."

SCHEDULE (A.)

FORMS OF CLAIM.

1. By a Creditor upon the Estate of a deceased Person, seeking Payment of his Debt out of the Deceased's Personal Assets.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.

E. F., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that C. D., late of —, deceased, was at the time of his death, and that his estate still is, justly indebted to him, the said A. B., in the sum of £—, for goods sold and delivered by the said A. B. to the said C. D., [or otherwise, as the case may be; or, if the debt is secured by any written instrument, state the date and nature thereof]; and that the said C. D. died in or about the month of —, and that the above-named defendant, E. F., is the executor [or administrator] of the said C. D., and that the said debt hath not been paid; and therefore the said A. B. claims to be paid the said debt or sum of £—, with his costs of this suit; and, in default thereof, he claims to have the personal estate of the said C. D. administered in this court, on behalf of himself and all other the unsatisfied creditors of the said C. D.; and, for that purpose, that all proper directions may be given and accounts taken.

Note.—This form may be varied, according to the circumstances of the case, where the claimant is not the original creditor, but has become interested in or entitled to the debt; in which case the character in which he claims is to be stated.

2. By a Legatee under the Will of any deceased Person, seeking Payment or Delivery of his Legacy out of the Testator's Personal Assets.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that he is a legatee to the amount of £—, under the will, dated the — day of —, of —, late of —, deceased, who died on the — day of —, and that the above-named C. D. is the executor of the said —; and that the said legacy of £—, together with interest thereon after the rate of £— per cent. per annum from the — day of —, [the day mentioned in the will for the payment of the legacy, or the expiration of twelve calendar months after the said testator's death], is now due and owing to him, the said A. B., [or still unpaid or unsatisfied], [or unappropriated or unsecured], and the said A. B. therefore claims to be paid [or satisfied] the said legacy and interest, [or to have the said legacy and interest appropriated and secured]; and, in default thereof, he claims to have the personal estate of the said — administered in this court, on behalf of himself and all other legatees of the said —; and, for that purpose, that all proper directions may be given and accounts taken.

Note.—This form may be varied, according to the circumstances of the case, where the legacy is an annuity, or specific, or where the plaintiff is not the legatee, but has become entitled to or interested in the legacy; in which case the character in which the plaintiff claims is to be stated.

3. By a Residuary Legatee, or any of several Residuary Legatees, of any deceased Person, seeking an Account of the Residue, and Payment or Appropriation of his Share therein.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that he is the residuary legatee [or one of the residuary legatees] under the will, dated the — day of —, of —, late of —, who died on the — day of —, and that the above-named defendant, C. D., is the executor of the said —, and that the said C. D. hath not paid to the said A. B. the [or his share of the] residuary personal estate of the said testator; the said A. B. therefore claims to have the personal estate of the said — administered in this court, and to have his costs of this suit; and, for that purpose, that all proper directions may be given and accounts taken.

Note.—This form may be varied, according to the circumstances of the case, where the plaintiff is not the residuary legatee, but has become entitled to or interested in the residue; in which case the character in which he claims is to be stated.

4. By the Person or any of the Persons entitled to the Personal Estate of any Person who may have died intestate, and seeking an Account of such Personal Estate, and Payment of his Share thereof.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that he is the next of kin, [or one of the next of kin], according to the statutes for the distribution of the personal estate of intestates, of —, late of —, who died on the — day of —, intestate; and that the said A. B. is entitled to [or to a share of] the personal estate of the said —, deceased; and that the said defendant, C. D., is the administrator of the personal estate of the said —, and that the said C. D. has not accounted for or paid to the said A. B. the [or the said A. B.'s share of the] personal estate of the said intestate; the said A. B. therefore claims to have the personal estate of the said — administered in this court, and to have his costs of this suit; and, for that purpose, that all proper directions may be given and accounts taken.

5. By the Executor or Administrator of a deceased Person, claiming to have the Personal Estate of the Testator administered under the Direction of the Court.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —. The said A. B. states, that he is the executor [or administrator] of E. F., late of —, but now deceased, who departed this life on or about —; and that he hath possessed the personal estate of the said E. F. to some amount, and that he is willing and desirous to account for the same, and that the whole of the personal estate of the said E. F. should be duly administered in this court for the benefit of all persons interested therein or entitled thereto; and that C. D. is interested in the said personal estate as one of the next of kin [or residuary legatee] of the said E. F., and the said A. B. claims to have the personal estate of the said E. F. applied in a due course of administration under the direction of this Court, and in the presence of the said C. D. and such other persons interested in the said estate as this Court may be pleased to direct, or that the said C. D. may shew good cause to the contrary; and that the costs of this suit may be provided for; and, for these purposes, that all proper directions may be given and accounts taken.

6. By a Legal or Equitable Mortgagee or Person entitled to a Lien as Security for a Debt, seeking Foreclosure or Sale, or otherwise to enforce his Security.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that under or by virtue of an indenture, [or other document], dated the — day of —, and made between [parties], [and a transfer thereof made by indenture dated the — day of —, and made between [parties]], the said A. B. is a mortgagee [or an equitable mortgagee] of [or is entitled to a lien upon] certain freehold property [or copyhold, or leasehold, or other property, as the case may be] therein comprised, for securing the sum of £— and interest, and that the time for payment thereof has elapsed; and that the above-named C. D. is entitled to the equity of redemption of the said mortgaged premises, [or the premises subject to such lien]; and the said A. B. therefore claims to be paid the said sum of £— and interest, and the costs of this suit; and, in default thereof, he claims to foreclose the equity of redemption of the said mortgaged premises, [or to have the said mortgaged premises sold, or to have the premises subject to such lien sold, as the case may be], and the produce thereof applied in or towards payment of his said debt and costs; and, for that purpose, to have all proper directions given and accounts taken.

7. By a Person entitled to the Redemption of any Legal or Equitable Mortgage, or any Lien, seeking to redeem the same.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that under or by virtue of an indenture, [or other document], dated the — day of —, and made between [parties], [and the assurances hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, an indenture, dated the — day of —, the will of —, dated the — day of —], the said A. B. is entitled to the equity of redemption of certain freehold property [or copyhold, or leasehold, or other property, as the case may be] therein comprised, which was originally mortgaged [or pledged] for securing the sum of £— and interest; and that the above-named defendant, C. D., is now, by virtue of the said indenture, dated the — day of —, [and of subsequent assurances], the mortgagee of the said property, [or holder of the said lien], and entitled to the principal money and interest remaining due upon the said mortgage, [or lien]; and he believes that the amount of principal money and interest now due upon the said mortgage [or lien] is the sum of £—, or thereabouts; and that the said A. B. hath made, or caused to be made, an application to the said C. D. to receive the said sum of £—, and any costs justly payable to him, and to reconvey to the said A. B. the said mortgaged property, [or property subject to the said lien], upon payment thereof, and of any costs due to him in respect of the said security, but that the said C. D. has not so done; and therefore the said A. B. claims to be entitled to redeem the said mortgaged property, [or property subject to the said lien], and to have the same reconveyed [or delivered up] to him, upon payment of the principal money and interest, and costs due and owing upon the said mortgage, [or lien]; and, for that purpose, to have all proper directions given and accounts taken.

8. By a Person entitled to the specific Performance of an Agreement for the Sale or Purchase of any Property, seeking such specific Performance.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that by an agreement, dated the — day of —, and signed by the above-named defendant, C. D., he, the said C. D., contracted to buy of him [or to sell to him] certain freehold property [or copyhold, leasehold, or other property, as the case may be] therein described or referred to, for the sum of £—; and that he has made, or caused to be made, an application to the said C. D. specifically to perform the said agreement on his part, but that he has not done so; and the said A. B. therefore claims to be entitled to a specific performance of the said agreement, and to have his costs of this suit; and, for that purpose, to have all proper directions given; and he hereby offers specifically to perform the same on his part.

9. By a Person entitled to an Account of the Dealings and Transactions of a Partnership, dissolved or expired, seeking such Account.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that from the — day of —, down to the — day of —, he and the above-named C. D. carried on the business of — in copartnership, under certain articles of copartnership, dated the — day of —, and made between [parties], [or without articles, as the case may be]; and he saith that the said partnership was dissolved [or expired, as the case may be] on the — day of —, and he claims an account of the partnership dealings and transactions between him and the said C. D., and to have the affairs and business of the said partnership wound up and settled under the direction of this Court; and, for that purpose, that all proper directions may be given and accounts taken.

10. By a Person entitled to an equitable Estate or Interest, and claiming to use the Name of his Trustee in prosecuting an Action for his own sole Benefit.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

Between A. B., Plaintiff.
C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that under an indenture, dated the — day of —, and made between [parties], he is entitled to an equitable estate or interest in certain property therein described or referred to, and that the above-named defendant is a trustee for him of such property; and that, being desirous to prosecute an action at law against — in respect of such property, he has made, or caused to be made, an application to the said defendant to allow him to bring such action in his name, and has offered to indemnify him against the costs of such action, but that the said defendant has refused or neglected to allow his name to be used for that purpose; and the said A. B. therefore claims to be allowed to prosecute the said action in the name of the said defendant, and hereby offers to indemnify him against the costs of such action.

11. By a Person entitled to have a new Trustee appointed in a Case where there is no Power in the Instrument creating the Trust to appoint new Trustees, or where the Power cannot be exercised, and seeking to appoint a new Trustee.

In Chancery.

[Lord Chancellor],
[Vice-Chancellor of England, or Vice-Chancellor, naming him],
or,
[Master of the Rolls].

C. D., Defendant.

The claim of A. B., of —, the above-named plaintiff. The said A. B. states, that under an indenture, dated the — day of —, and made between [parties], [or will of —, or other document, as the case may be], he, the said A. B., is interested in certain trust property therein mentioned or referred to, and that the above-named defendant, C. D., is the present trustee of such property, [or is the real or personal representative of the last surviving trustee of such property, as the case may be]; and that there is no power in the said indenture [or will or other document] to appoint new trustees, [or that the power in the said indenture [or other document] to appoint new trustees cannot be executed]; and the said A. B. therefore claims to have new trustees appointed of the said trust property, in the place of [or to act in conjunction with] the said C. D.

12. By a Party entitled to revive or to carry on a Suit, and seeking to revive or carry on the Suit.

INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of case, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to come with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any Station, and of EVERY AGE.

BONUSES.

The two First Divisions averaged 22l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid; the Third, 23l. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1860, averaged rather more than 36l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to exceed that Amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the security and benefit of the ASSURED exceeds SIX HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND POUNDS; and the Income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of 127,000l. per annum.

The Balance Sheets of this Society (containing every item of Receipt and Expenditure) are at all times open for the inspection of any of the ASSURED.

LONDON, MAY 4, 1850.

WE are glad to see, by a letter of the Lord Bishop of London, recently made public*, (under his Lordship's authority), that so eminent a divine takes the same view of the judgment in Mr. Gorham's case that we have taken in this journal, viz. that it does not decide, or affect to decide, the doctrinal question upon which so much difference of opinion appears to exist. "I would desire you," says his Lordship, "to consider in what respect the recent judgment has so altered the character of our Church as to justify any of her members in severing their connexion with her. That judgment may be erroneous, may be a wrong interpretation of the Church's mind; but it is the interpretation adopted by a few fallible men, not by any body authorised by the Church to settle any point of doctrine; nor can it have the effect of changing any of the Church's doctrines. That of baptismal regeneration stands in her articles and liturgy as it did before. That is not denied, nor even questioned, by the judgment, the purport of which is, that to those who admit the Church's doctrine of baptismal grace, a greater latitude of explanation is permitted than you or I think right. But this, after all, is only the opinion of a Court of law, not the decision of the Church itself in Convocation. I hold, that until the Church's articles and formularies are altered by the authority of Convocation, or of some synod equivalent to Convocation, her character as a teacher of truth remains unchanged."

So far, the Lord Bishop's language is explicit enough. When so eminent a leader in the Church, holding to the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, expresses so distinct an opinion that the Judicial Committee has decided nothing at all about that doctrine, except that, by law, Churchmen holding it, are to be allowed a larger liberty of construction than may seem fit in the eyes of either the Lord Bishop or Mr. Hope, it is difficult to understand why pious men should be so irate against the judgment, and should deem it as it were an upturning of the very foundations of the Church.

We do not quite so well understand what the Lord Bishop of London means in the next passage of his letter, in which he says:—

"I cannot regard any sentence of an Ecclesiastical Court as finally settling a question of doctrine: that can only be done by a synodical decree; and even then judges may err in their interpretation of that decree, and yet the decree itself will hold good; and in another appeal, respecting the very same point of doctrine, another Court might give a different judgment. I think, therefore, that nothing short of a formal act of the Church itself, repudiating what it has hitherto asserted as truth, can warrant a man in quitting her communion.

"What we really want is a Court of appeal so constituted that the members of our Church can place reasonable confidence in its decisions; but it must still be borne in mind, that any such Court will be liable to errors in judgment, and that it belongs to the office of a judge, not to make laws, but to expound them to the best of his ability."

In particular, we do not clearly understand what the learned prelate means by "a Court of appeal so constituted that the members of our Church can place reasonable confidence in its decisions."

It appears to us, that, in the passages above quoted, the Bishop is confounding the doctrine of the Church with the law of the land, treating a question of fact as a question of law. The question, what is the doctrine of the Church, is like a question of foreign law, or of the custom of merchants, or of any other custom, and, as such, is a question of fact, cognisable by a Court of law. No doubt, in this sense, no Ecclesiastical Court can, nor does it attempt to, settle a question of doctrine. What it does attempt is, to find out, by the written or oral evidence of learned divines, what the Church holds as a doctrine, and, having found that, it applies the law of civil rights accordingly. No doubt, also, it is true that the doctrine of the Church, if it be ascertained, can only be altered by an act of Convocation, assented to by the Queen, that being the body which the constitution recognises as possessing authority to declare what is the doctrine of the Church. But if the doctrine of the Church were altered by a decree of Convocation, the question, what is its doctrine, would still remain as before, a question of fact, and not of law. If the question of fact, as to the doctrine of the Church on all points, were clear; in other words, if the articles of the Church, (which are the act of a Convocation), taken in connexion with the authorised prayers and the practice of the Church, (which are looked at to aid in the construction of the articles), afforded a clear statement of what is the doctrine of the Church, there never could have been the difficulty which occurred in Mr. Gorham's case. But it was because the authoritative declarations of the Church herself, respecting the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, did not afford, not merely to laymen, but to pious, and learned, and inquiring ecclesiastics, that clear explanation which would produce a perfect, or nearly perfect, conformity between the witnesses to the fact—it was because, on the contrary, seeking evidence of the fact in the only way in which it could be obtained, viz. by examining the written testimony of learned ecclesiastical writers, and receiving the oral testimony of living ecclesiastics, the Judicial Committee was compelled to the conclusion that the doctrine of the Church is not, as a fact, precisely fixed—it was, we say, for these reasons, as we understand the judgment of that tribunal, that it came to the conclusion which it did adopt.

* See the Times of the 1st May.

Now, having regard to this, which we believe is the true explanation of the action of a Court of law deciding upon civil rights, the title to exercise which depends upon such a question of fact as that of the doctrine of a Church, we do not, we repeat, at all clearly understand at what the Bishop of London points when he speaks of a Court of appeal in which the Church can place reasonable confidence. We gather rather from the language of his indiscreet followers, than from the eminently cautious and veiled language of the learned prelate himself, that his Lordship means, that what is wanted is a Court of appeal wholly, or even partly, composed of ecclesiastical judges. If that is what he means, then, we apprehend, that is not at all what the laity wants or desires; and moreover, that such a Court of appeal would be based on the most unsound and pernicious principles that could well be imagined. For the qualification most essential to a Court of justice, that which is at the very foundation of its impartiality, is, that it shall have no judicial opinion upon the facts to which it has to apply the law; that it shall take its judicial knowledge of those facts from the evidence, and from the evidence only. Now, apply this to a Court of appeal sitting on such a case as Mr. Gorham's, and we should have probably an archbishop and a few bishops with certain fixed opinions on the disputed fact of doctrine, and another archbishop and a few other bishops with certain other fixed opinions on the same disputed fact. The result would of course be, a decision on a civil right of property, depending not on an inquiry into the fact, by minds judicially unfilled with any preconceived opinion, but on the fixed opinions of the majority of the judges. Such a tribunal would, in all cases of doubt as to what the doctrine of the Church is, be wholly incapable of doing justice: it would not ascertain the fact; it would come to the judgment-seat with its opinion ready made, and would take its own opinion for the fact—conscientiously, no doubt, but not so as to do justice.

We believe that the more this subject is considered, the better it will be understood that there is nothing, in cases involving questions as to what the doctrine of the Church is, which takes them out of the ordinary principles applied to all cases in which the right of parties to the enjoyment of civil rights, depends on their bringing themselves within the range of some rules or customs, the exact nature or limits of which are to be shewn to the Court by evidence. If there exists an authority which can declare—and such authority has authoritatively declared—the rule or custom, (as in the case of Convocation with regard to any doctrine of the Church), and if that authority has declared the rule explicitly, there can be neither difficulty for the Court nor danger to the Church, because the Court, finding the fact proved beyond dispute, applies the law without hesitation. If, on the other hand, the rule is not clearly expressed, so that those whose business it is to study and find out its meaning, differ in their construction of it, (as has been the case in this question of baptismal regeneration), then the Court does what it does in all such cases, it takes the rule to be as it is shewn by a preponderance of evidence; or, if it can find no preponderance of evidence within certain limits, it then takes the rule to be unsettled between those limits, and decides the civil right, depending on adherence to the rule, to exist, if the claimant has not exceeded the limits.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

WE return to the New Chancery Orders, as the subject is one necessarily of great interest to the Profession, for the purpose of further considering the range and mode of their application.

And first on the question whether they are intended to be applicable to cases not of the classes enumerated in Order I. It will be observed that that Order confines itself, with reference to pure administration suits, to the administration of personal estate. (Nos. 1 to 5, inclusive). But classes Nos. 6 to 11, inclusive, are applicable to real as well as to personal estate. It will be observed also, that, at any rate, classes Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9, and particularly the two latter, are classes of suits in which there may be the usual incidents of a contested suit, meaning thereby a suit in which a substantial contest takes place at the original hearing. A mortgagee, for instance, seeking foreclosure or sale, may be met, not by a mere claim to have the account taken, but by a denial of the existence or legal validity of the mortgage. A vendor seeking specific performance may be met by a defence compounded of a denial of the fact of any agreement; of the invalidity of the agreement, by reason of fraud or other extrinsic circumstances; of a contention as to the construction of the agreement, if there is a binding agreement; and, finally, of objections to the title; the latter of which defences only would be the subject of reference to the Master, the three former being objections on which the Court would or might have to decide at the hearing.

Now, since the Orders are expressly made applicable to such cases, it follows that in the Orders themselves must be sought the means of dealing with the difficulties of such cases, if it be possible. The 13th Order appears to give to the judges very large powers for this purpose; for on the hearing of the plaintiff's motion for his order, and the cause shewn by the defendant why the relief should not be granted, the Court may either grant or refuse the relief at once; or it may direct accounts and inquiries, which it may be presumed means accounts and inquiries in the Master's office; or it may direct other proceedings to be had, (language implying proceedings generally, in or out of the Master's office), for the purpose of ascertaining the plaintiff's title to the relief claimed; not, it will be observed, merely to ascertain the extent of the plaintiff's title, assuming him to have title, but the preliminary question also, whether he has any title at all: so that this Order, in sense as well as in literal terms, seems to contemplate cases where the evidence of witnesses may be required; where an examination of the defendant may be required; where an issue, or an action, or, in fact, any of those proceedings may be requisite which take place or may be directed in a suit commenced by bill and answer, after the answer has come in and been replied to. Assuming that we are correct in this, it seems to follow that the Orders must be intended to be applicable to at least all cases not exceeding in specialty, those cases susceptible of contest at the hearing, which are expressly included in the 1st Order; because it can hardly be supposed, consistently with the liberty given to the suitor, and the authority given to the Court by the 6th Order, that the Court is intended to have powers for the purpose of grappling with the difficulties that may occur in cases included expressly in the Orders, and to be precluded from the use of those powers, in reference to cases of no greater difficulty, permissively included in them.

We conclude, that, to any case not exhibiting on the face of the statements made on both sides, difficulties insurmountable, except by the machinery of bill and answer, the Orders are intended to be permissively applicable, though they may not be ejusdem generis with the cases included in Order I.

A question of considerable importance with regard to this part of the subject is, whether the New Orders can be applied to a case in which interlocutory relief, by injunction or otherwise, may be required. This seems to depend principally on the effect of the 4th and 11th Orders, by which the defendant is to have at least fourteen days, after service of the writ of summons, to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have the relief claimed against him.

The 4th and 11th Orders, it is apprehended, apply only to the complete and final relief sought, and do not interfere with the general jurisdiction of the Court to grant limited interlocutory relief, pending the determination of the final question of equitable right between the parties. If they are to be construed to exclude preliminary relief, they must be so construed as well with reference to cases expressly included in the 1st Order, as to others; and as it is certain that, in many of those cases, it is every day's practice to require injunctions, and occasionally receivers, (as, for instance, in a suit by a legatee, charging the executor with malpractice or insolvency); and as it follows, that if these Orders exclude the possibility of such interlocutory relief before the time for shewing cause, they would be useless as to a large portion of the cases to which they are directed expressly to apply, it follows also, that nothing short of clear declaration, or irresistible inference to be collected from the language of the Orders themselves, can be expected to induce the Court to put upon them a construction so destructive of their efficiency.

Then is there any such irresistible inference—for specific declaration, it is clear, there is none—ousting the general jurisdiction of the Court to grant interlocutory protection, pending the final determination of the right to relief? We apprehend there is not. The 2nd Order simply substitutes the filing of a claim for the filing of a bill, and gives to the former proceeding the force and effect of the latter; so that a suit commenced by claim is as effectually launched, as a suit, as if it were commenced by bill. The 9th Order makes all claims and proceedings, &c. subject to the general rules and practice of the Court, so far as they are not inconsistent with the Orders. The 4th and 11th certainly do not, in terms, exclude interlocutory protection; and, taking them in conjunction with the 13th, we apprehend it to be clear that they refer to the shewing cause against, and determining, the title of the plaintiff to the complete relief that he demands, not to an interlocutory order, which never gives, in strictness, the relief demanded, but only protection against injury to the subject-matter of the right claimed, pending the determination of the title to it. All the Orders referred to, taken together, appear to us to leave subsisting the right of a plaintiff proceeding by claim, whether by common claim under the 1st Order, or by special claim under the 6th, to go to the Court for such interlocutory protection as he might have had if he had proceeded by bill; and we conceive, that the application for such protection will continue to be, as it is now, obtainable by motion ex parte or on notice, according to the case made, and supported by evidence on affidavit, according to the present practice.

It may, however, be urged, in opposition to this view of the question, that as there can be no answer, the defendant would, if the plaintiff might proceed under these Orders, be deprived of the advantage which the rule of practice, excluding affidavits against the answer, gives him in a suit commenced by bill. It would be also to be observed, that, unless the shewing cause on affidavit is to be treated as answering, the Orders would, in effect, abolish the common injunction for default in answering. And it may be thought that such material alterations in the practice cannot be implied, and that therefore the Orders are not intended to apply to injunction suits of any kind.

The answer to these objections seems to us, as to the first, that the practice of giving credit to the answer against any weight of affidavits, is one that has universally been condemned as both absurd and unjust, and one that the Court will not be astute so save; and as to the second, that if the defendant at the proper time shews cause, the Court will deal with the case as it finds it; and that if the defendant makes default, the plaintiff will get his order, or so much of it as the Court thinks just; and that therefore the common injunction will never be wanted, except for want of appearance, as to which the Orders do not seem to require any alteration in the practice.

LONDON, MAY 11, 1850.

THE Court of Queen's Bench has decided, within the last few days, that there is no rule of law prohibiting a barrister from taking a brief directly from the suitor without the intervention of an attorney*. It was admitted, in the judgment of the Court delivered by Lord Campbell, that the practice in civil causes had been otherwise, that professional etiquette was in favour of such practice, and that it would be for the benefit of the public that it should continue; but it was held, that, as there was no legal obligation to follow the practice, it was not competent for the Courts to refuse to hear a barrister instructed by the suitor, and that such refusal was a ground for a new trial. His Lordship traced the progress of the English Bar in this respect, and said that the only statutory provision upon it is in the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 91, whereby it is enacted, that no counsel shall appear in the said courts unless instructed by an attorney; that the statutes allowing prisoners to make their full defence by counsel in all cases of felony are silent as to the manner in which they are to be instructed; that in the criminal courts the rule requiring the intervention of an attorney does not prevail, and it is difficult to draw any distinction for this purpose between civil and criminal proceedings. It was also stated, that serjeants' counters existed in England before the statute of Edward I, and that there was reason for believing that they (after the fashion of the Roman patrons) communicated directly with the parties. By degrees the advantages of having a division in the business, and having two orders of practitioners, became more and more felt; but for a long time the attorney was employed only to sue out processes, or to do what was necessary to bring causes to trial and execution. "I highly approve," added his Lordship, "of the distinction which has been drawn between the functions of a barrister and those of an attorney. The intervention of attorneys between the barrister and his client has contributed not only to the dignity of the Bar, but to the improvement of English jurisprudence. . . . I am by no means insensible to the inconvenience which may result from this privilege, on the part of the clients, being now judicially recognised; but I trust that this decision will not alter the uniform practice which has existed for more than a century, and that the interference of the judges will not be necessary to rectify any abuses."

The decision in the foregoing case is one which might have been expected, inasmuch as the institution of the Bar in England is, for the most part, based on no positive law, but rather upon its legal recognition for many centuries, and the exercise of the general authority possessed by the Superior Courts of justice, of regulating the privilege to practise in them. All who feel the rights and duties of counsel, and the relation in which they stand to the public, will agree in the observations of the Court upon the advantages of keeping distinct the two branches of our Profession—the barrister and the attorney.

Formerly the barrister could act alone for the suitor; then it became the practice, and was adopted as a rule of etiquette among the members of the Bar, that an attorney should intervene; it is now decided that such intervention is not required by law.

But although a barrister may act without an attorney, sufficient care has been taken by our prevent a barrister from acting as an attorney. On the other hand, until lately, an attorney was not permitted to assume the office of the advocate.

Mr. Pulling, in his late work on the Law of Attornies, (p. 7), says—"The province of an attorney has been always considered in this country, as it was in the civil law, to be very distinct from that of a barrister, both with respect to the character of advocate and that of counsellor; for though, practically, attornies do occasionally act as advocates in some of our inferior courts, and before police magistrates, and are commonly resorted to, in the first instance, for legal advice, and are expected to have a competent degree of skill and knowledge of the law, yet in no case, except, perhaps, in that of persons charged with criminal offences before justices of the peace, can attornies demand the privileges of an advocate. (See Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Ad. 673; Cox v. Coleridge, 1 B. & Cr. 37; Rees v. Barron, 3 B. & Al. 43). . . . It is an invariable object with the judges in Westminster Hall, as Lord Denman, C. J., recently expressed it, 'that no connexion should exist between the two branches of the Profession which would be likely to lead to any malpractice in either.' (Ex parte Bateman, 6 Q. B. 853). . . . It has been held, even in inferior courts, where attornies ordinarily practise as advocates, that they cannot at the same time give evidence of anything they would otherwise be in a situation to depose to in the cause; (Stone v. Byron, 4 Dowl. & L. 398); and where the justices at quarter sessions have, to avoid similar inconveniences, made an order giving exclusive audience to barristers, such order has been held valid and approved of by the Courts at Westminster. (Rees v. The Justices of Denbigh, 1 New Mag. Cas. 547)."

This distinction between the functions of the two branches of the Profession, and the barrister's legal right to be instructed directly by his client, appear to have been completely lost sight of in the County Courts Act, and in the proposed bill for their extension. Attornies and advocates are placed exactly on the same footing as regards the advocacy of the cause, but a barrister ~~must~~ be instructed by an attorney. By sect. 91 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, an attorney, or a barrister instructed by an attorney, or (by leave of the judge) any other person, may appear for a party to the cause, but no fee is to be allowed for counsel except by leave of the judge. The effect of this enactment is to place the barrister in a worse position than any other person in the county court, for it renders the employment, and therefore the expense, of an attorney a requisite preliminary to the employment of counsel; while attornies, and (by leave of the judge) even unprofessional persons, may act as advocates at once upon the suitor's retainer.

We do not, however, complain of the intervention of attornies between client and counsel, nor would we, considering the practice which has prevailed in this respect, raise objections to attornies appearing as counsel in cases involving small amounts, (sums not exceeding 20*l.* in actions of contract, and 5*l.* in actions of tort), where they have been engaged as attornies by the client; but we do complain of the threatened ouster of the Bar from their accustomed rights and privileges, which they exercise not only for their own benefit, but for that of the public; we complain of the now frequent practice of attornies employing other attornies as advocates, and we object to the union of two offices, each of which should be preserved in its integrity, both for the sake of the public and of the Profession. The employment of counsel may be rendered consistent with the cheap administration of justice, and we trust that the English Bar will not submit to a complete usurpation of their time-honoured and most useful privileges, but that they will firmly assert their right to exclusive audience in those cases to which it is now proposed to extend the jurisdiction of the county courts.

We have received many communications respecting the amendment of the stamp laws, all complaining, in strong terms, both of the oppressive operation of the stamp duties themselves, and of the multitude, intricacy, and obscurity of the statutes by which they are regulated. The statutes relating to the stamp duties, and still wholly or partially in force, would fill a large volume of ordinary print; the very titles of them occupy several pages in Mr. Tilley's treatise. The obscurity of the enactments, and the difficulty of applying them in practice, are notorious. Yet errors are visited with a punishment which, as one of our correspondents justly observes, would be too severe for an intentional evasion; and the punishment most commonly falls, not on the legal adviser who commits the error, but on some unconscious claimant under the instrument, in the shape, at the least, of a heavy penalty, and often of the heavy costs and other disastrous consequences of failure in an action.

The Ministerial measure, which, it appears, has not yet been abandoned, would undoubtedly improve the stamp laws, but it falls far short of what ought to be done, and might be done with the greatest facility. The whole of the existing stamp acts ought to be replaced by a single consolidated statute, embodying so much of the law as the necessities of the revenue may be supposed to require, and removing such of the ambiguities and errors in the old acts as have been brought to notice in the reported cases, or in the treatise. Such an act, with the help of the treatises on stamps, might be readily prepared in a week. It should contain a clause declaring all instruments executed before the introduction of the bill to have been duly stamped.

Several of our correspondents urge the expediency of an agitation for the total abolition of all stamp duties—a proposal in which we heartily concur. There can be no doubt that they are by far the most mischievous and unjust of all our taxes; the revenue produced by them is exactly known, and an equivalent addition to the income and property tax would not be so great as materially to increase the temptations to evasion of that tax.

The Profession would benefit largely by a bargain under which the whole of the stamp duties, except the certificate duty, would be repealed. Their agitation for the minor object of abolishing the latter duty seems likely to be successful; but an agitation against the stamp laws generally would carry with it the sympathies of the public at large.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—There is reason to believe that the Profession is not generally aware of the provisions of the 137th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, which relates to judges' orders; and it may be expedient to call attention to the enactments of that clause, and particularly taken in conjunction and in contrast with the provisions of the 133rd and 136th sections.

The 133rd section declares valid executions against a bankrupt's lands executed by seizure, and against his goods executed by seizure and sale, before the bankruptcy, without notice of any act of bankruptcy, and bona fides existing throughout the business: "Provided that nothing therein contained shall be deemed or taken to give validity to . . . any execution founded on a judgment on a warrant of attorney, or cognovit actionem, or judge's order obtained by consent given by any bankrupt by way of fraudulent preference."

This clause is under head 20 of the act, "Of Transactions not affected by Bankruptcy;" but its provisions are much at variance with clauses 136 and 137, which are under head 21, "Of Warrants of Attorney," &c. The same observation might, perhaps, apply also to sect. 135.

Sect. 136 enacts, that a warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem by a trader, not filed within twenty-one days, according to the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, "shall be deemed fraudulent, null, and void, to all intents and purposes whatever." It says nothing of the judgment and execution which may be founded on such an instrument, nor does it declare the warrant of attorney or cognovit to be given by way of fraudulent preference, in the terms of sect. 133: it simply enacts, that it shall be deemed fraudulent, &c. It would seem, that if a warrant of attorney be "void to all intents and purposes whatever," no valid—that is, merely irregular—proceeding can be founded upon it; but if such be the construction of this section, coupled with sect. 133, then an apparently material part of the 137th section is quite unnecessary.

Sect. 137, so far as necessary to be quoted for the present purpose, is as follows:—"Be it enacted, that every judge's order made by consent given after the passing of this act by any such trader defendant in any personal action, and whereby the plaintiff in such action shall be authorised forthwith after the making of such order, or at any future time, to sign or enter up judgment, or to issue or take out execution in such action, and whether such order shall be made subject to any defence or condition, or not, in case the action in which such order shall be made shall be in the Court of Queen's Bench, or in case the action wherein the same is made shall be in any other court, a true copy of such order shall, together with an affidavit of the time of such consent being given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the defendant, be filed with the officer acting as clerk of the docket and judgments in the said Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days after the making of such order, in like manner as a warrant of attorney in any personal action and a cognovit actionem given by any defendant in any personal action, or copies thereof, and affidavits of the execution thereof respectively, may be filed with the said clerk within twenty-one days after such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem shall have been executed, otherwise such judge's order, and any judgment signed or entered up thereon, and any execution issued or taken out upon such judgment, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatever."

Therefore, not only is the order null and void to all intents and purposes whatever, but the judgment and execution share the same fate by express enactment; so that, under this section, whatever construction may be put upon other parts of the statute, a trader defendant, taken in execution upon a judgment signed by virtue of such an unfiled order, would be entitled to be discharged from custody upon his own application. Execution against the person is taken as the example, because it illustrates most forcibly the operation of the clause, and is irrespective of giving any undue advantage to the execution creditor over other creditors; and if the above be not the effect of this section, then the clear words, "null and void to all intents and purposes whatever," do not mean null and void to all intents and purposes whatever.

It may be that the 136th section was framed with the intent, that the sheriff executing a writ against the defendant might be protected, the judgment and execution not being thereby declared void. If such conjecture be correct, the sheriff will have no protection under the 137th section; but the writ of execution, being wholly null and void to all intents and purposes whatever, is in law no writ at all, but a blank piece of parchment, and so no justification for taking the defendant under a ca. sa., or for seizing his lands or goods under other writs of execution.

If the judgment be wholly null and void, it is evident that lapse of time or subsequent proceedings will not cure the defect. A judgment may be registered, become a charge upon the defendant's lands, and enforced as such, and after all the title of a purchaser turn out to be altogether bad, in consequence of the fatal but latent defect of the instrument on which it was founded not having been filed in time.

Whatever decision may be given upon the 177th clause, should it come before the Courts, it is desirable that the Profession, and more particularly that branch which is practically and daily dealing with judges' orders of this kind, should be aware of the construction which may be, and it would seem must be, put upon it.

Of course, these remarks apply to traders only; but who can assert positively of any individual that he is certainly not a trader within the meaning of the bankrupt laws?

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging as to the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of case, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

BONUSES.

The two First Divisions averaged 22l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid; the Third, 28l. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1849, averaged rather more than 36l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

The Fund accumulated and invested for the security and benefit of the ASSURED exceeds SIX HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND POUNDS, and the Income, which is steadily increasing, is now upwards of 127,000l. per annum.

The Balance Sheets of this Society (containing every item of Receipts and Expenditure) are at all times open for the inspection of any of the ASSURED.

LONDON, MAY 18, 1850.

WE have now before us Mr. Turner's bill for diminishing the delay and expense of proceedings in the Court of Chancery in England; and we have not frequently had to consider a law bill with which we could find so little fault. The principal objects of the bill are three: to provide for obtaining the opinion of the Court on questions of construction, by means of special cases; to provide for taking accounts of the debts due from the estates of testators and intestates, without a general administration; and to bring all exceptions to pleadings before the Court at once. There are other objects, but they are of minor importance.

The enabling clause, with respect to special cases, is proposed in the following words:—

"That it shall be lawful for persons interested, or claiming to be interested, in any question cognisable in the said court, as to the construction of any act of Parliament, will, deed, or other instrument in writing, or any article, clause, matter, or thing therein contained, or as to the title or evidence of title to any real or personal estate contracted to be sold or otherwise dealt with, or as to the parties to or the form of any deed or instrument for carrying any such contract into effect, or as to any other matter falling within the original jurisdiction of the said Court as a Court of equity, or made subject to the jurisdiction or authority of the said Court by any statute; not being one of the statutes relating to bankrupts, and including among such persons all lunatics, married women, and infants, in the manner and under the restrictions hereinafter contained, to concur in stating such question in the form of a special case for the opinion of the said Court; and it shall also be lawful for all executors, administrators, and trustees to concur in such case."

VOL. XIV.

This is followed by seventeen clauses, intended to supply the machinery for working out the system. We collect from them that the Court will be authorised to give its opinion on the construction of the case presented to it, without first requiring preliminary accounts to ascertain whether there is any estate on which such declaration may operate; and without inquiries as to parties, if the parties to the case are willing to take the opinion of the Court without such inquiries. For by the 14th and 15th clauses it is proposed to be enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the said Court, upon the hearing of any such special case as aforesaid, to determine the questions raised therein, or any of them, and by decree to declare its opinion thereon, and, so far as the case shall admit of the same, upon the right involved therein, without proceeding to administer any relief consequent upon such declaration; and that every such declaration of the said Court contained in any such decree shall have the same force and effect as such declaration would have had, and shall be binding to the same extent as such declaration would have been, if contained in a decree made in a suit between the same parties instituted by bill: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said Court, if it shall see fit so to do, before proceeding to make such decree as aforesaid, to send any case or cases for the opinion of any of her Majesty's Courts of common law, reserving the consideration of all further directions and of the costs, and to make such decree as aforesaid upon such further directions: provided also, that if, upon the hearing of such special case as aforesaid, the Court shall be of opinion that the questions raised thereby, or any of them, cannot properly be decided upon such case, the said Court may refuse to decide the same." "That every executor, administrator, trustee, or other person making any payment or doing any act in conformity with the declaration contained in any decree made upon a special case, shall in all respects be as fully and effectually protected and indemnified by such declaration as if such payment had been made or act done under or in pursuance of the express order of the said Court made in a suit between the same parties instituted by bill, save only as to any rights or claims of any person in respect of matters not determined by such declaration."

The reason why the Court now requires preliminary accounts in many cases, where the parties would desire to have the construction declared first, is, that it will not make a mere declaration of right without a decree for relief, and will not waste its time, and, as it is called, stultify itself, by directing relief, when there may be nothing on which the relief can operate. But if, by act of Parliament, it is authorised to make a declaration of right without relief, the reason for the preliminary inquiries ceasing, it may be assumed that the practice will cease also. And as, by the 15th section, the declaration is only to be an indemnity as far as a decree between the same persons would be so, saving all other rights, it would seem, that provided the parties to the case are satisfied that all parties interested are before the Court, or are willing to take the declaration quantum valeat, as between those who are before the Court, the Court is not intended to trouble itself with any class inquiries not required by the parties.

In this branch of the bill there is an omission, which we conceive it would be greatly to the advantage of suitors to have supplied. There is no provision to enable the Court to dispense with having before it all the persons constituting a class, where the interests of that class are required to be represented. Now, one of the greatest inconveniences felt in bringing cases of construction to a termination is, the necessity of having all the members of a class before the Court—a thing in itself perfectly unnecessary; for surely, if two or three of a class are before the Court, the interests of the whole class are likely to be just as fully supported as if all the persons constituting it were parties. We venture to suggest to the learned gentlemen who have the conduct of this bill, the introduction of a clause authorising the Court, in all cases where classes of persons are requisite parties, to make a declaration binding on the whole class, if it shall be satisfied that some members of the class are before it, and that such members have no adverse interest to the rest.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYREWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Mid Prize, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, MAY 25, 1850.

A DECISION has recently been pronounced (Thomas v. Roberts, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, 22nd May) which appears to us to carry the doctrine of interference with the right of a father to the custody of his children, farther than any case has yet gone. Of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, as representing the Crown, to interfere between a father and his children, if he does not properly take care of them, no one of course entertains any doubt; nor is it to be doubted that the jurisdiction of the Court is not limited to cases where it finds the father actually improperly treating his children, but that it has power to interfere if it has reasonable ground to believe that he will improperly treat them. We are not going, therefore, to suggest any objection to the decision in Thomas v. Roberts, either on the ground of want of general jurisdiction, or on the ground that the petitioner's father was not actually bringing up his child improperly, but was only prospectively expected so to bring him up. The objection that we humbly submit may be made to this decision is, that the conduct and principles of the father, and of those with whom he was shewn to be habitually living, were not so clearly and positively immoral or religious, as to draw to them the jurisdiction of the Court, unless the limits, not exceeded in the preceding authorities on the subject, are to be greatly exceeded.

In the first of the two leading cases on this subject Shelley v. Westbrook, Jac. 206, and Wellesley v. The Duke of Beaufort, 2 Russ. 1) there was specific unmistakable impropriety in the father, and conduct considered upon the evidence to be the direct result of his principles. In the second there was specific unmistakable bauchery of the grossest kind, practised under the very roof which he sought to make the shelter of his children, both male and female; clear and positive inculcation of blasphemy, immorality, and blackguardism, as regarded the male children. Mr. Shelley had abandoned the mother of his children, and cohabited with another woman; was, according to the report, the avowed author of a work not only deriding the Christian religion, but denying the existence of God; and not only had he been guilty of immoral conduct, but the Court, upon the evidence before it, was compelled to conclude that his immoral conduct was not mere human weakness, but the effect of his principles. So that there was an almost irresistible inference from the evidence, that Mr. Shelley would bring up his children to disbelieve, not only in Christianity, but in God, and to pursue a course of immoral conduct as a matter of right and propriety. Now, whether the law of this country does or does not look upon the bringing up of a child in the Christian religion as a duty to the State, it is tolerably clear that it does look upon the bringing up of children in the belief of a Supreme Being as such a duty; in fact, it imposes upon an avowed atheist some serious legal disabilities, which it does not impose upon persons professing any creed, however separated from Christianity.

In Mr. Wellesley's case the decision turned upon the immoral conduct, and not the irreligion, of the father. But the nature of the immoral conduct was not such as to admit of any doubt or discussion—that is, discussion whether it was immoral or not, within the meaning of the law, the doctrines of any known religion, and the usages of decent society. Part of his own conduct was actual crime at law: part of his method of bringing up his sons consisted in inculcating, as spirited and manly, the commission of acts which would be crimes, and punishable at law. It was not as if Mr. Wellesley had himself done, and had taught his children to do, things as to the morality of which decent men might differ: he had done, and instigated his children to do, things which were clear and unmistakeable sins against morality, punishable both by the ecclesiastical and civil law. So, in the dictum of Lord Eldon in De Mannesville v. De Mannesville, (10 Ves. 61), the doctrine laid down by his Lordship does not go beyond acts clearly and grossly immoral or impious. "Since I have sat here," says his Lordship, "I removed a child from its father upon considerations such as these: the father was a person in constant habits of drunkenness and blasphemy, poisoning the mind of the infant." And in the case of Mytton v. Holyoake (see M'Pherson on Infancy, 149) the husband had not only treated his wife with cruelty, and his children with harshness, but introduced women of profligate character into his house, and taught the children to repeat and write blasphemous and irreligious language.

We believe there is no case to be found of the jurisdiction being exercised, in which the principles and conduct of the father were such as to admit at all of discussion, whether they were opposed to any settled rule of religion or morals; that is, to any rule so settled that a person contravening it would be obnoxious to the censures of the church, or to penalties imposed by the law. And if no such case is to be found, may it not be thought that the jurisdiction does not extend so far, bearing in mind the extreme delicacy of the jurisdiction, and the fearful authority with which it invests a judge, to interfere with a right of the most sacred and important character?

The remaining question is, whether, in Thomas v. Roberts, the principles and conduct of the father, as proved, were such as to be clearly irreligious or immoral, tried by any fixed and known rule.

Now, the charges against the father, made out by evidence, were three: first, the expulsion of his wife from his home and society, at a period when certainly such expulsion could not be viewed by any decent and sane man otherwise than as harsh and cruel treatment; secondly, the disuse of prayer in practice, and the professed belief of its being unnecessary and useless; thirdly, the professed and practical rejection of the seventh day as a day of worship and rest. We do not collect from the Vice-Chancellor's judgment that he rested it upon the first charge, however strongly he, with a just indignation, reprehended the conduct established by that charge. So that the only grounds on which, or on one of which, the judgment proceeds, are the two remaining charges. And taking the disuse of prayer first. It must be recollected, that the Agapemonians did not say that generally prayer was useless, or that they had always neglected it. On the contrary, they said, that they had persisted in continual prayer until they had obtained that for which they prayed, viz. communion with God. They said, that having obtained that, they had ceased to use prayer, because it was no longer necessary to them, and they used instead hymns of praise and thanksgiving. Now, the English of all this is, that, according to their own statements, they believe themselves to be what, in the language of some other sects, is termed "the elect,"

"the Lord's chosen," or the like; that is, persons having secured their salvation, and having therefore nothing more to pray for; and persons so believing, may be, perhaps justly, thought persons of wonderful conceit and folly; but are they clearly guilty of impiety? Do their belief and practice amount to more than this—that they err in their estimate of their own religious perfection? And does any amount of such error constitute impiety or blasphemy, in the sense usually legally attached to those words?

Passing to the second head, that of neglect of the seventh day. Now, on this point, the Agapemonians also qualify their doctrine: they deny that they do not hold the seventh day holy, for they say that they hold every day holy, and devote every day to the Lord. So, at least, we construe their somewhat obscure expression of regarding "each day unto the Lord." And though it may be a very wrong construction of the fourth commandment, and of the practice of the Christian Church, to hold the six days holy, as well as the seventh, does it amount to anything more, bearing in mind that it was not proved, or even alleged, that the Agapemonians do on the seventh day the only thing that is forbidden by the fourth commandment, viz. work; but only that they use certain sports on the seventh and on every other day indifferently?

Looking at the conduct of the Agapemonians, with reference to the test which we find, as we conceive, tacitly applied in the older authorities, could they be subjected, on account of it, according to the actual practice of the Courts, to any pains, penalties, or damages, in either a court of law or a court of equity?

The Agapemonians may be very foolish fanatics, and the father, in the case of Thomas v. Roberts, may, in addition, deserve the censure of every man of decent feeling for his treatment of his wife; but, we confess, it does appear to us, that the exercise of the jurisdiction in this case introduces a principle not apparent in the authorities; making it exercisable in cases where the question of impiety or immorality may be one of opinion, instead of confining it to cases where the immorality or irreligion can be tested by some such positive rule as liability in practice to the judicial censures of the Ecclesiastical Courts, or to penalties or damages sustainable at law.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE EXTENSION OF THE COUNTY COURTS JURISDICTION.

THE great mistake that we have been in the habit of making in this country in our judicial system has been to suppose, that justly to administer the laws, is necessarily to administer justice. It may be conceded at once, that in this country the administration of the law is very pure—as unsullied by any influence of interest or private feelings as it is possible to conceive, recollecting that it is after all conducted by men with human sins and weaknesses. But nevertheless, admitting that, and admitting also that for the most part the laws are themselves just, it would not follow, nor is it the fact, that our superior courts always administer justice: for justice, as the citizen practically understands and expects it, means not merely the assertion of his right, without reference to the labour of obtaining it, the time within which it can be obtained, and the cost at which it is obtained; but it means the obtaining of his right, with such an amount of labour, time, and expense as will make the right, practically and commercially speaking, worth having. No doubt there is in the hearts of most men, and very certainly of Englishmen, a sort of thirst for enforcing their rights in the abstract: they would rather make great sacrifices to have them, than abandon them altogether. But this, a disposition, politically speaking, most valuable, and destined for the broad assertion of those great classes of rights which distinguish the free and commanding from the subservient nations of the earth, is one which it is not for the interest or convenience of mankind to call into operation on every trifling difference which occurs between man and man in the every-day business of a commercial country. As to these, not great emergencies, but inevitable and daily disputes as to rights of property, a right is not worth establishing, if the cost of obtaining it, including therein not the mere money paid, but the estimated value of time, exceeds some given proportion of its actual value when obtained. Take, for instance, a contest between a professional man or a tradesman, claiming from his employer or customer a debt of 40*l.*, which is disputed. It must always be assumed, wherever there is a contest, at least where the ground of disputing a claim is not poverty, that there is some doubt either of the legal or the moral validity of the claim; for if there were no doubt, there would be no dispute. If, then, the mode of procedure for the recovery of the debt be such, that, if the plaintiff be wrong, his costs will certainly far exceed his claim, and that, if he be right, his costs, over and above what he will obtain from his adversary, will make a deep inroad upon the amount of his claim recovered; and if, in addition, the loss to him by consumption of his time (to say nothing of the anxiety and suspense) will be almost certainly equivalent to a fourth or a fifth of the value that he claims, what commercial inducement can he have to enforce his right by process of law? He may do it to "punish the rascal," as it is phrased, which means, to be revenged; he may possibly do it, from a stern love of justice in the abstract, for the sake of others; but he will hardly do it for his own personal benefit, if he has only a little more prudence than temper; for the simple reason, that "le jeu ne vaut pas la chandelle." If he succeeds, and, obtaining a verdict, with costs, is paid his debt, and has to pay nearly the whole of it to the legal soldiers who have won his battle, can it be said—will it be felt by himself—that he has obtained justice, in the sense of obtaining his right? Certainly not. What a man of business means by obtaining his right, is obtaining something useful and valuable to which he is entitled; not taking 40*l.* out of one pocket in order that a second man may compel a third to put it back into his other pocket.

There must be, then, in order to make the administration of the law also a practical administration of justice, in general such a proportion between the trouble and cost of enforcing a right, and the value of the right, as will make the obtaining of it commercially valuable. What that proportion is, precisely, it may not be easy to ascertain. It is probable that it ought never to exceed 10*l.* per cent. on the demand; but it is quite certain that the existing proportion, when rights under the value of 50*l.* are enforced in our superior courts of law, with the fairest regard to economy, is very much beyond the point at which prudent men of business, seeking, not revenge, but simply the just restitution of their property, will venture generally to seek their rights.

To multiply instances to shew, that, in claims under 50*l.* enforced in the superior courts, the proportion of cost, to advantage, is altogether a disproportion, would be waste of time.

The fact is too notorious in the Profession; and the general public, if any of their number should chance to read these pages, will have no difficulty in crediting an assertion, coming from a lawyer, tending to discredit the cause of expensive law.

Now, it is not, of course, requisite, if the foregoing facts are true, and the foregoing principles sound, to advance any other arguments to shew that all jurisdiction upon claims not exceeding 50*l.* should be withdrawn from the superior courts, if their procedure remains as it is. For, since the object of courts is to administer justice to the people, establish the fact that it cannot be obtained in a given court, and it follows that the jurisdiction of that court, as administered, is useless, and should be either altered or abolished. But it would not follow, that, because such jurisdiction should be withdrawn from the superior courts, as at present conducted, therefore it should be given to the county courts; and here lies the apparently debateable ground, of which the opponents of the County Courts Extension Bill have taken advantage. Not discussing the question, whether some change of jurisdiction is not absolutely essential, in order to enable the people to have justice in respect of subjects of dispute not exceeding 50*l.*, they have availed themselves of the apparent objections to the county courts, and have endeavoured to shew that at any rate those courts should not be intrusted with a 50*l.* jurisdiction.

Now, I think it will need no great argument to shew that most of the objections urged against the county courts are purely surface objections, and that it is precisely to those courts that the jurisdiction can be given with the greatest amount of public advantage.

In the first place, the courts are there ready made; all their staff organised; their process known; their forms of pleading settled, and easy to be moulded, if any alteration should be requisite. No material alteration is requisite in order to adapt them to their extended jurisdiction, except such an alteration of the scale of costs as will enable the parties to actions to employ attorneys of the higher class, and counsel, if need be; and an increase of the emolument of the judges and other responsible official functionaries, in proportion to the increased responsibility and quantity of their labour.

There is nothing whatever to prevent the jurisdiction being in full and profitable exercise by next Michaelmas Term, if it should be given to the county courts.

On the other hand, if it be proposed to attain the same object by a simplification of the procedure of the superior courts, it may be doubted, in the first place, whether any such simplification can be obtained; that is, whether any system of procedure can be devised which shall at once answer the exigencies of those whose subjects of litigation, being of small amount, require, above all things, small cost and great expedition, to make a decision worth its price; and of those to whom, their subjects of litigation being extended in amount and complication, a more minute sifting, and a more tedious and expensive procedure, may be worth adoption.

In the next place, whether the problem can be solved at all, or not, it is quite certain that it will not be solved—nay, probably, that its solution will not be attempted—for many sessions. Now, whatever may be the defects of the county courts, unless it could be shewn, not merely that there are doubts of their beneficial action, but that they are quite clearly inapplicable, it would be utter folly to neglect the opportunity of directly mitigating an admitted evil, for the sake of a prospective remedy, as to which, whether it will be better or not can only be the subject of conjecture.

But next, what are the objections to the county courts? They resolve themselves, as put forward, into these:—

I. Objections to the qualifications of the judges.

II. Objections to the constitution of the courts, especially in reference to their being local.

III. Objections to the effect of their extended jurisdiction on the system of trial by jury; and,

Lastly, objections to their effect on the status of the legal profession.

As to the first objection, it is said that the judges of the county courts are not selected from that class of counsel, among which are to be found men eminent enough for talent and learning, to deal with the questions that would come before them to the satisfaction of the public. To this it may be answered, that, if the judges are not selected from a sufficiently high class of the Bar, they must be in future selected from a higher class; and that, if the salaries now given are not sufficient to attract men of competent ability, higher salaries must be given, and will attract competent functionaries.

But, in truth, it is rather an insult, and a very puerile insult, to a body of men having or having had among its ranks such men as Starkie, Amos, and others, if of less note, yet, perhaps, not of less solid reputation and acquirements, to impute to them an incapacity to satisfy the public litigating in respect of demands reaching the vast amount of 50*l.*, more especially if, as is very properly contemplated, an appeal is to be given to the superior courts. Masters in Chancery and Commissioners in Bankruptcy, who are in general taken from about the same rank, the former of the Chancery Bar, the latter of both Bars indiscriminately, as county court judges, dispose daily of questions involving claims of ten times the value of 50*l.*, to the satisfaction of the public; and since the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts have come into operation, the decisions of the Masters in Chancery continually affect claims where thousands are at stake. In truth, the objection is utterly trivial, and unworthy of further notice.

Next as to the constitution of the courts. It is objected, that, because of their being local, the judges will have local interests and prejudices; and that the juries will also be local juries, having local interests and prejudices.

Now, as to this objection, it has been well observed, that it is answered by the general satisfaction given by the county courts in their 20*l.* jurisdiction, to which precisely the same objections would be applicable, and were, in fact, originally suggested. But is there, in fact, anything in the objection? Because a judge has a local residence, must he necessarily have local interests and prejudices; or because he has them, must he necessarily forget his oath of office, and be ready to forfeit the judicial appointment which he has sought and desired, and on which his position in society, perhaps his subsistence, depends? Chancellors and Vice-Chancellors are usually localised in London: is it imputed to them, that therefore they are unfit to try London causes? So, Commissioners in Bankruptcy are all local judges. Has any one ever suggested, that therefore they are unfit for their duties? All the police magistrates all over the country, all the colonial judges, in fact all judges, except the fifteen common-law judges, are local judges, and even the common-law judges are so with regard to all their London business.

This objection, too, is therefore one that has no experience to support it, even if in theory it were tenable.

Then, with regard to the objection that the juries will be local juries, the point might well be passed by as irrelevant with reference to county courts, supposing that the practice is not to be altered, of leaving parties to have juries only when they desire them; because, judging from the past experience of the county courts, the parties will not, once in a hundred times, choose to have a jury, but will prefer trusting to the judge. But supposing that juries will be much resorted to, how can it be said that local juries will be an incident peculiar to the county courts? In a great majority of the cases now tried at Nisi Prius, the juries are inevitably of the same locality as the causes; and the mischief, admitting it to be one, is borne with, and is thought not inconsistent with a perpetual laudation of the institution of juries.

That it is to some extent a mischief, that a jury should be taken from the neighbourhood where the contending parties live, is not to be denied, but it is an evil which, if a jury be used at all, must be borne occasionally with any system. If likely more frequently to occur in a county court than in a nisi prius court, that would be a reason rather for discouraging in the county courts trial by jury, than for excluding from them causes which, it is admitted, cannot be tried in the superior courts without an expense acting, in effect, as a bar to their being tried at all.

The third objection is, that, inasmuch as the county courts are assumed to proceed principally without juries, or that inasmuch as, at any rate, it is assumed that the mischief of local juries ought to prevent their use in county courts, the proposed extension of the jurisdiction of those courts will tend to discredit the use of trial by jury.

Now what an argument is this? What! is jury trial valuable, not in its uses, but for itself? Is it such a summum bonum, that the people are to go without justice, unless they can have it through a jury? Or is not jury trial rather a system which the people of this country for a long time loved, with or without reason, for every purpose—which they still love for many purposes—but which they are willing to forego for certain other advantages not attainable except by giving it up? Are there not in this country a multitude of modes of judicial proceeding to which parties resort—sometimes voluntarily, to the exclusion of the fixed tribunals of the country—in which trial by jury does not appear, and to which, if objections are made, it is certainly not because of the absence of juries? There are no juries in Chancery; there are none in Bankruptcy; there are none either in the Ecclesiastical Courts or the Admiralty Court; there are none in those courts which are exclusively the creatures of the parties—arbitration courts; yet, in all these courts, men submit important rights to adjudication; and though they complain of delays, of expenses, of many evils, they do not complain of the absence of juries. The truth is, that the worship of jury trial is at this day mere lip worship—cant, and little else; and the majority of men of business of every class prefer—for adjudication upon their rights of property, inter se, as distinguished from adjudication between them and the State—the decision of an intelligent judge, to that of such bodies of men as are to be found in the average of juries. If it were necessary to produce proof of this assertion, at least with reference to adjudication upon rights of small amount, I refer to the fact of the very small number of jury trials in the existing county courts, where parties are left at liberty to have a jury or not.

I come now to the question of the operation of the proposed extension on the Profession; and that must be considered, not so much with reference to the interest of the Profession as an independent ground of consideration, as to the interest of the public in the attendance of the Profession in the county courts, and the interest of the Profession only as incident to its public utility; for I think that no man will be found in the Profession who will urge, that if there is a conflict of interests between the public and the Profession, the interest of the public should be sacrificed to that of the Profession.

The question is, then, whether the extension of the county courts will operate prejudicially on the Bar, so as to lower its standard, to the injury of the public, or on the body of educated Attornies, with a like influence;—admitting, as I do most fully, that, so long as there is such a thing as litigation, the existence of a learned and high-toned Bar, and of a body of educated and gentlemanlike Attornies for the conduct of such litigation, is of unquestionable advantage to the public.

Now, as being more familiar with the position of the Bar, and with the sources of its business and position, than I can pretend to be with regard to the other branch of the Profession, I shall inquire what would be the probable effect of the proposed extension of jurisdiction on the Bar, assuming that, if a respectable Bar is preserved, so must a respectable body of Attornies, since the one can scarcely exist without the other. That the business of the superior courts will diminish is more than probable; but certainly all the 50*l.* causes that are now tried in the superior courts, and probably more than twice that number, will find their way into the county courts, and in a considerable majority, if not in all of such causes, it is probable that counsel will be employed, if, as is proposed, the scale of costs allowed by the intended act be such as to justify parties in employing counsel. That there will be less frequent opportunity of purely technical argument, and for the display of mere acumen, is beyond doubt. On the other hand, there will be more frequent opportunity for argument upon the law and merits of a case; and there is, on the whole, no reason to anticipate that there will be anything in the practice of the county courts to lower the tone of the Bar, any more than there is in the practice in the Masters' offices in Chancery, to which it will, in all probability, be somewhat similar, except in its being more bustling. That the change of business may, by causing a diminution of London business and an increase of local business, require the creation of a provincial Bar, is not improbable; and other changes, difficult to be foreseen in detail, may take place. But in any such changes there is no reason to anticipate anything that will lower the tone and position of the Bar, so far, at least, as the public is concerned in it; because they do not depend so much upon changes in the locality and details of business, as upon circumstances which will not be altered by the proposed changes. There must still be the superior courts, and the high prizes which the judgment-seats in those courts offer to the ambitious and earnest lawyer. It is upon these things, upon the existence of high honours not to be attained except by an uninterrupted course of high-toned conduct, and upon the purity of the general current of business, not upon the special locality within which business is transacted, that the character and position of the Bar depend. Wherever there is a court in which business to be done regularly requires the legal attainments of the advocate, there will be found the attendance of a regular Bar; wherever there is a Bar, there will be the visions of advancement to the higher forensic struggles of public life—of the judicial prizes which time and patience, and long and honourable employment, can alone win—and there will be a learned and a high-minded, though perhaps but a junior Bar.

The apprehension of there being no regular Bar to attend the county courts is, I conceive, altogether without foundation, assuming, as it is assumed, that the extension of jurisdiction will materially draw business away from the superior courts. The Bar, or at least a Bar, will follow the business, if the business be such as to justify a Bar. If it is not, it is idle to talk of injury to the administration of justice; still more idle to talk of deterioration to the Bar, by reason of the transfer from the superior courts, or the creation of business which did not, or does not, of its nature, require the attendance of counsel.

So much for the objections to the principle of the proposed bill. Objections have been made, and by persons whose opinions are entitled to very great consideration, to some of its provisions. The principal points objected to are, that it should be compulsory on the plaintiff to bring his plaint in the district where the defendant resides; and the power given to the judges of the county courts to order a debt to be paid by instalments—both points on which, I believe, objections are felt in reference to the existing county courts.

These are questions of detail, on which, surely, the Legislature may form a sound opinion, without any very lengthened inquiry.

As for the alleged difference between what are now termed commercial and mercantile debts, and those dealt with in the present county courts, making it desirable to retain for the one a ponderous and complicated judicature, more than for the other, I take it to be pure imagination. The difference may require differences in the details of procedure, such as those adverted to, but cannot affect the general question. One thing, however, is certain, that if an appeal be not given from the county courts to the superior courts, they will become a public nuisance, instead of benefit. For, however men may disagree as to the price at which law shall be obtained, or the mode and form in which it shall be administered, all agree that certain law is desirable; and the notion of having anything like certain law, if it is to be administered by sixty judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction, without any common superior, is too wild to be entertained. T. S.

EXTENSION OF COUNTY COURTS JURISDICTION.

Committee for the Amendment of the Law of Debtor and Creditor.

At a meeting of the committee and subscribers, holden at the Committee-rooms, 13, Old Jewry-chambers, on the 10th May, 1850, William Hawes, Esq., in the chair, the following report was read:—

SEVENTH REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO THE SUBSCRIBERS.

Your committee, in reporting upon the very important matter referred to them, will first express their sense of the great value to all classes of a cheap, simple, and efficacious mode of recovering debts, whether the limit may be 20*l.* or 50*l.*, if effected so as not to foster a litigious spirit in the community.

If such a system can be framed by a judicious union of the practice of the superior courts with that of the county courts; if it can be thoroughly impressed on the minds of debtors that an appeal to law cannot benefit them by any delay they may be able to obtain through its instrumentality for the payment of just debts; and if sufficient protection can be afforded to the debtor against vindictive or unprincipled creditors, then, indeed, will the law encourage and support credit, based either on character or property, and discourage fraud, to the great benefit of all classes of this commercial country.

The County Court Act, passed in 1846, has been, by the simplicity of its proceedings, productive of great benefit to the country, though the good it was calculated to do has been very much interfered with by the excessive amount of the fees of court; but its operation, being limited to debts under 20*l.*, and restricted within certain limits defined by the distance which the debtor resides from his creditor, has not affected or interfered with the security or the regular and punctual payment of what are generally known as trade debts.

Your committee, in this stage of their report, wish to mark the distinction they draw between the class of debts generally recovered in county courts and those which will be recoverable therein if the present limit of 20*l.* be extended to 50*l.*

Few tradesmen, and certainly not the wholesale dealers and manufacturers, rely upon the punctual payment of debts under 20*l.*, to enable them to meet their fixed liabilities or their acceptances. Not so as regards debts running from 20*l.* to 50*l.* Thousands of tradesmen will be unable to carry on their business if a new and serious element of uncertainty be introduced by law, to interfere with the punctuality with which such debts are now liquidated.

With trade debts from 20*l.* to 50*l.*, the goods they represent have been sold at a price regulated by the credit to be given: they are resold and turned into money. With the great mass of small debts this is not the case; they represent goods sold to the consumer, for the payment of which the seller relies on the permanency of the income of his buyer, from whatever source it may be derived. Such are the vicissitudes and irregularities in the means of all classes, that there is necessarily a much larger addition made to the cost price of goods for this class of debts than in regular trade transactions between manufacturers and wholesale and retail dealers. A small profit and regularity in payment are essential to the prosperity of one class; larger apparent profits, with greater risk and much uncertainty in the period of payment, is the custom of the other.

Impressed, then, with the importance of preventing the introduction of a new element of uncertainty into the collection of trade debts, but fully alive to the evils and inconveniences of the present system, your committee wish, in the strongest manner, to express their anxiety to promote such a change in the administration of the law as will lessen those evils and tend to simplify the tedious, uncertain, unsatisfactory, and expensive proceedings incidental to the trial of actions in the superior courts; but, in order successfully to accomplish this end, it is necessary thoroughly to understand the practical operation, and the effect upon debtors as well as upon creditors, of the law as it now stands.

Your committee will, therefore, point out the means now used by creditors to recover debts between 20*l.* and 50*l.* in the superior courts. The first step is the issue of a writ of summons, at a cost for court fees of 5*s.* If this produce no effect, and declaration be filed and judgment signed, the total amount of fees is 1*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*; but if the debtor persist in defending the action, and pleads to the suit, expenses accumulate rapidly; for, what with delay of one kind or another, the trial may be postponed for months, and, in very many cases, the creditor waives his claim, rather than run the risk of an adverse verdict, with its accompanying bill of costs, or from the certainty of the loss of the extra costs, even if a verdict be obtained.

From the best information your committee can obtain, it appears that not four out of every hundred writs which are issued for the recovery of trade debts are carried to trial; the service of the writ, and the fear of ulterior proceedings, as well as the expense and trouble attending them, act most beneficially on the debtor, who is thereby induced to meet his creditor, and to make arrangements for the immediate payment of the debt and costs, under the sanction of a judge's order—a process which is as effective as a verdict of the Court. This mode of procedure is simple, rapid, and inexpensive—far more rapid and much less expensive than the corresponding proceeding would be under the County Court Act, especially in the country, and under the scale of fees attached to Mr. Fitzroy's bill, as it was introduced and passed the second reading in the House of Commons.

If the payments directed by the judge's order be not made, execution issues, and the debtor is driven either to an equal distribution of his effects, or his property or person is taken, as the case may require; but in either case, whether by the judgment being unsatisfied for seven days after notice, or the debtor lying in prison for twenty-one days, an act of bankruptcy is committed, which any creditor for 50*l.* may use to secure an equal distribution of the debtor's effects.

The court fees under this mode of procedure amount to 1*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*; it would be difficult to suggest a more simple process, and the amount of fees cannot be complained of. But, besides these advantages incidental to proceedings in the superior courts, a judge in chambers, having satisfactory evidence that the debtor is about to leave the country, will issue a capias for his arrest, by which much fraud is prevented.

The practical effect of these processes is to induce, as far as law can do so, great exertion on the part of the debtor to pay his creditor.

In most cases payment is made in a few days after the issue of the writ; or, if it be followed by a judge's order, time is given for payment by mutual arrangement; and the few writs (not four per cent. of the whole number) which are not so settled are carried as to trial in one of the superior courts.

This four per cent. of the entire number of writs issued represents—first, the number of creditors who will not at once accept their debtors' offer, and who are willing to risk an addition to their loss to test the truth of the debtors' statements; secondly, the malicious and unprincipled debtors and creditors, who, from various motives, seek to accumulate expenses upon their opponent, and to delay unfairly the payment of their just debts; thirdly, those, larger in number than either of the foregoing classes, who prefer to decide the fair and legitimate differences of opinion which arise in the settlement of complicated accounts, by the verdict of a jury; and, fourthly, those cases of debtors who are obliged occasionally, under the pressure of special circumstances, to defend themselves temporarily against the claims of their creditors.

Now, what will be the mode of procedure and the effect on debtors, should the provisions of the County Court Act be extended to these debts?

It has been shewn that every preliminary step in the superior courts tends to induce the debtor to pay his debt and costs, without actual resort to the Court itself.

It appears to your committee that the practice of the county courts, when applied to debts of a larger denomination than 20*l.*, will induce debtors to defer the payment of their debts beyond the agreed term of credit, knowing that no summary process can issue; and that as the court sits usually only once a month, and a week's notice must be given of trial, the debtor is sure of nearly two months extra credit, if even then he cannot obtain from the leniency of the judge any further extension of time for payment by instalments; and in proportion as the fees of the court are low, and the temporary pressure for money great, so will the debtor by legal means defer his payment to suit his own convenience, regardless of the injury to his creditor. The debtor may, by this means, be benefited by the aid of the law, but he will reap the benefit at the cost of his creditor, and at a sacrifice of his honourable engagements.

The fees of court, under the existing County Court Act, for hearing a cause without a jury, amount, with the poundage, for a sum of 20*l.*, to 3*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* Under the scale proposed by Mr. Fitzroy, for a debt of 50*l.*, they would have been nearly 6*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.*; whilst the fees to be paid to the superior courts on all actions settled under judge's orders, with execution, amount to only 1*l.* 5*s.* 5*d. Under the proposed bill the creditor has to pay court fees out of pocket, and receive them back by such instalments as the judge may think fit; and, in order to ascertain whether the instalments are duly paid, he has, on the occasion of each instalment becoming due, to pay a fee of 1s., which was increased under Mr. Fitzroy's bill to 2s. 6d. Cases have been sent to your committee, in which the period for the payment of such instalments has been extended over several years.

* The fees here named are the court fees only: the attorney's costs will be the same in whichever court the business may be transacted; but inasmuch as the attorney's costs chargeable to the defendant under the County Court Act are low, the plaintiff employing his regular solicitor will have to pay more extra costs.

The principle of the County Court Act implies that one of two parties to a contract has a right to apply to a court to relieve him from its conditions, the first party having fulfilled all his engagements. Instead of courts of justice being appealed to by a creditor to support his rights, and to aid him to enforce his just claims, the debtor will use them to aid him in evading his engagements; and it is the opinion of your committee, that in the course of time—for the effect of alterations in the law are not immediate—this system will materially injure small traders; it will increase their difficulty of obtaining credit; an extra risk will attach to unprotected debts; and while dealers of the class above those whose debts to one house rarely exceed 50*l.* will be able to obtain extended credit, those lower in the scale will suffer for want of it, or pay exorbitantly for the extra risk. In the opinion of your committee the supporters of this change entertain very erroneous views of credit; attributing evil to its existence rather than to its abuse—the only proper object of legislation.

Your committee, having thus examined the process now in use for the recovery of debts, and that proposed to be substituted for it by the bill of Mr. Fitzroy, arrive at the conclusion, that, except in a small number of special cases, say less than four per cent. of the whole number of actions for the recovery of simple contract debts entered in the superior courts, the present law relating to debts from 20*l.* to 50*l.* is practically better suited to the wants of the trading classes than that proposed to be substituted for it; that it is more summary, except in the few cases referred to, less costly, more just in its principle, and, in the long run, more beneficial to debtors, and the legitimate maintenance of proper credit.

The next point to which your committee directs attention is the uncertainty and want of confidence which will exist in the decisions on important points of law, which must constantly arise in the settlement of contract debts under 50*l.* Without a power of appeal to the superior courts—the only effectual mode of securing an uniformity of decision—the law will be a lottery. In courts in the metropolitan districts, even now, great differences in the mode of practice exist; one judge will admit the chief clerk of a respectable solicitor to attend for his client; another judge will refuse to hear him; and when it is recollected that all barristers of seven years' standing at the Bar are eligible for the office of judge, and the fact that many of these appointments are made from political motives, your committee cannot but look with great alarm at the effect which may be produced by want of uniformity in the unrevised decisions of so numerous a body of judges.

If, then, the jurisdiction of the county courts be extended, your committee trust that the salaries of the judges may be such as to secure the services of able and upright men.

Your committee have also considered whether the loss of the advantages derived by trade from the power of a creditor to obtain a warrant to arrest a debtor, if it be proved to the satisfaction of a judge in chambers that he is about to leave the country, is of sufficient importance to be considered as an objection to this extension bill as it now stands; and it has arrived at the conclusion that this protection against one of the worst classes of mercantile fraud ought not to be withdrawn without more consideration than has yet been given to the subject.

The next point referred to the consideration of your committee is the effect which will be produced on trade and on credit by obliging the creditor to bring his action wherever his debtor may reside. By the County Court Act every plaint must be brought in the court of the district in which the debtor resides, unless the creditor resides at a greater distance than twenty miles from the debtor, when he may proceed as usual in the superior courts. Mr. Fitzroy's bill practically forces every plaintiff into the county courts, and obliges him to try his plaint in the district in which the defendant resides, unless special permission of the court be obtained to try it in the district in which the creditor resides.

This clause has, however, been withdrawn by the House of Commons, with a view to restrict this provision.

Your committee decidedly object to any alteration of the law as it now stands. It appears to meet satisfactorily the class of debts under 20*l., which arise chiefly between parties residing in the same or contiguous districts, and also to be applicable to the higher class of trade debts, between 20*l.* and 50*l.*, which are mostly contracted between retail dealers and manufacturers or wholesale dealers living at a distance.

Indeed, it would, in nearly all cases, be a greater hardship to the debtor to oblige him to pay the costs and travelling expenses of the plaintiff and his witnesses, brought frequently from distant places, than to require him to attend at the court of the creditor. What ingenuity might be shewn by a clever rogue in buying goods of dealers residing in distant places, relying on the difficulty such a law would impose on his creditor to compel him to pay his debt! And, independently of the question of expense, your committee object to the proposed alteration, because they view it as one of those indirect attempts to injure credit, and foster a jealous feeling between debtor and creditor, in which some politicians of the day appear to delight. Every unnecessary difficulty thrown by law in the way of obtaining the payment of just debts is to that extent a denial of justice to the creditor, and a premium on the dishonesty and fraud of the debtor. The debtor has bought his goods under a promise to pay at a fixed period, and the law ought to afford every reasonable facility to oblige the debtor to keep his engagement with his creditor.

Your committee will now call the attention of the meeting to another effect of the extension of the jurisdiction of these courts, which has not yet received the consideration it deserves. As at present constituted, poor people of all occupations and classes appear in these courts personally, and support or oppose the plaintiffs, as the case may be.

The amounts in dispute run from 6*d.* to 20*l.*; the great mass being about 6*l.* Will the class of persons interested in such plaints, if the jurisdiction of these courts be extended, as it is proposed, be able to obtain the same patient and attentive, as well as speedy, hearing they now do? And will not the more frequent use of juries, and the attendance of a Bar, by extending the length of all proceedings, cause so much uncertainty when any case will be heard, as to amount to a prac-

* The following proportions between debts under and above 50*l.* in a few first-class wholesale houses have been sent to your committee:—

1. Out of 610 town accounts, there were 466 under 50*l.*
2. " 1000 monthly bills, 395 were between 20*l.* and 50*l.*
3. " 1615 accounts, 326 " 20*l.* and 50*l.*
4. " 1637 " 1114 were under 50*l.*
5. " 3130 " 2755 " 50*l.*
6. " 380 monthly bills, 490 " 50*l.*
8. " 1265 " 1170 " 50*l.*, and 532 from 20*l.* to 50*l.*

tical exclusion from these courts of that smaller class of cases and persons for which they were constituted? So that, whilst an uncalled-for change is being forced on those who can appeal to other courts, another and more helpless class will be deprived of the advantages they have hitherto enjoyed—advantages, the benefit of which is not to be measured by the amount of money collected, but by the satisfaction produced in the minds of the people by a cheap and speedy administration of justice.

Your committee, having noticed at great length all the points referred to them, have now only to express their opinion as to the best course to be adopted with reference to this proposed extension of the jurisdiction of the county courts.

The bill, as it now stands, assuming that the clauses to be proposed by the Attorney-General will be adopted, will not, in the opinion of your committee, effect that which it professes; it will not afford to trade any cheaper or more simple means to recover trade debts, in the great majority of cases, than it now possesses; but it will introduce new elements of uncertainty in the transactions of trade, and tend thereby to limit the credit of the class who require and benefit the most by it: it will, by confining the hearing of complaints to the debtors' court, cause considerable and unnecessary expense to debtors; and it will, while professing to bring justice nearer to the rich, remove it from the reach of the poor; and, besides these objections to the measure as it now stands before the House of Commons, your committee feel that the great change proposed to be made in the tribunal before which all disputed claims relating to trade debts are to be tried—removing them from the jurisdiction of the judges of the land to that of barristers of a few years' standing—has not received that careful and matured consideration its importance requires.

Under these circumstances, your committee feel it their duty to recommend that a petition should be presented to Parliament, praying that the consideration of this measure may be postponed until the subject has been more thoroughly considered by the trading classes; and that a deputation be appointed to wait upon the Right Hon. Lord John Russell, M.P., to urge the adoption of these opinions upon the Government.

By order of the committee,
W. W. OGBOURNE, Secretary.

LONDON, JUNE 1, 1850.

A CORRESPONDENT, who has had much experience in the working of the county court system, has called our attention to certain defects which exist under the present law, and to certain other defects which would arise from the extension of such system, as proposed by the bill now before Parliament. We intend to embody his suggestions in this article; and we think it will be clear from them, that, whether the county court jurisdiction be extended or not, the statute now in force requires alteration in several material respects.

It is an evil that there is no power to register the judgments obtained in county courts, so as to charge real estates, according to the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. Our correspondent mentions a case, which occurred in his own practice, of a defendant being possessed of unincumbered realty, but not of any personalty which could be seized under a county court execution. The debtor preferred suffering the forty days' imprisonment to paying his debt. This he had done twice, and the plaintiff, whose debt was about 12*l.*, and who had spent nearly as much in endeavouring to recover it, then abandoned his claim.

As regards evidence, it should be observed, that there is no mode of obtaining in a county court admissions of written documents. If proof of a document, therefore, attested by a witness, be required, he must attend, at whatever distance he may reside from the court, and for such attendance he is to receive, if a professional man, 7*s.* 6*d.* per day, and 6*d.* per mile. In one case an attorney came from a distance for this purpose; he was absent, in consequence, from his business for three days, for which he was entitled only to 1*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*

VOL. XIV.

U

The presence of an adverse witness in a county court cannot be compelled, nor has the suitor, injured by his absence, any substantial redress for such injury. It is true, there is a power to inflict a penalty of 10*l.*, part of which is to be paid to the person injured; but this is frequently an insufficient amount, even at present, and, of course, would be less sufficient for claims from 20*l.* to 50*l.* The penalty, moreover, can be imposed only if the witness be served ten clear days before the day of hearing, and his necessary expenses be then tendered to him. If the plaintiff takes this precaution, the defendant, having the opportunity of paying the amount of debt and costs into court five days before the hearing, may thereby deprive the plaintiff of the costs of the subpoenas and conduct money paid to witnesses, in addition to the costs of the attorney, who may probably have prepared the plaint, and advised upon the evidence.

Upon the subject of execution, we may remark, that if the present bill for extending the jurisdiction of the county courts become, in its present form, the law of the land, the power of taking the person of the debtor in execution, for amounts up to the sum of 50*l.*, will be taken away. The substitute of a commitment by the judge for forty days requires a previous personal service of a judgment summons, whereby the debtor, of course, receives warning, of which he may avail himself to the prejudice of the creditor. Such commitment is also only for a limited period, and if the defendant remain obstinate, the same process must be repeated. Several summonses may be required, but although the plaintiff must pay for each before it issues, yet he is allowed only for the one served.

By sect. 106 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the high bailiff may not sell goods taken in execution until five days from the day of seizure have expired; and by sect. 133 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, all executions are avoided by notice of an act of bankruptcy being given to the execution creditor at any time before sale. The effect of such a state of the law is obvious.

There are at present contradictory decisions in county courts as to whether a landlord's claim for rent has priority over executions of those courts. (See sect. 107 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 96). This should be remedied by a clause declaring the landlord entitled to priority for a certain amount; otherwise there will be this anomaly, that in some counties the landlord's claim will be defeated—in others it will not; while in all actions commenced in the superior courts his right will be recognised. High bailiffs should be required to mark on each writ of execution, immediately they receive it, the exact time of its receipt.

As to meane process, there is no provision in the new bill for the arrest of a defendant about to leave the country, when the action has been commenced in the county court. A plaintiff in such a case must submit to lose his debt, or must bring his action in the superior court, and be deprived of the costs of it.

There is an objection to the publicity of the proceedings in the county court at an early stage of the cause. The names of parties against whom summonses are issued are generally called over in open court before a large number of persons; the result is, that every creditor of the defendant presses upon him at once, each hoping to be first in his execution, and therefore refusing to give time. Many honest struggling debtors have been crushed by this means. The space of ten days between the service and the hearing of the summons is insufficient for the purpose of enabling parties to call in debts due to them, or to make other arrangements for settling the actions brought against them. This will be more severely felt if the jurisdiction is increased to 50*l.*, and debtors are allowed to be summoned to all parts of the kingdom—it may be, to two or three courts at different places on the same day.

Such are several of the suggestions of a practical lawyer, conversant with the advantages and disadvantages of the county court system. We recommend them to the attention of our readers, and hope that they will not be altogether disregarded by the Legislature.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Joseph Nowell, of Barton-upon-Humber, Lincolnshire; John Smith, of Andover, Southampton.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Joseph Bayldon Rayner, Gent., of Horbury, in the county of York, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the West Riding of the county of York.

1. The Law and Practice of Benefit Building Societies, terminating and permanent, and of Freehold Land Societies; with all the Cases decided to this Time; Rules, Forms of Mortgages, Pleadings, and other Matters; the Statutes and Instructions. By JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. 12mo., pp. 288. TIDD PRATT, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. 12mo., pp. 131. [Shaw & Sons.]
3. A Treatise on Benefit Building Societies, containing Remarks upon the erroneous Tendency of many of the Societies at present in Existence, and an Inquiry into the true Causes of their defective Operation, with a View to their Amendment or the Formation of New Societies upon correct Principles. By ARTHUR SCRATCHLEY, M.A., Actuary to the Western Life Assurance Society. 12mo., pp. 216. [Parker.]

Mr. Thompson's work is a carefully compiled and useful guide to the law applicable to the formation, management, and proceedings of building societies. He has collected and arranged all the statutes and decisions, and has also furnished precedents of rules, mortgages, and pleadings. The greater part of his information is conveyed in the convenient form of annotations upon a set of rules which he has selected for the purpose; not, however, very judiciously, for the rules are ill drawn, and are upon the terminating principle, which is essentially vicious. To make amends, however, Mr. Thompson has given from Mr. Scratchley's work (with his permission) the variations applicable to a permanent society; and has also reprinted the rules of the National Freehold Land Society, which is, in substance, a permanent building society, and is registered by the name of "The National Permanent Mutual Benefit Building Society." These rules are a perfect model for this kind of draughtsmanship.

The law upon various points affecting building societies is in a most unsatisfactory state. To the statutes and to the decisions, (such as they are), including the decisions on those clauses in the Friendly Societies Act which, according to the latest authorities, are incorporated in the Building Societies Act, Mr. Thompson's book furnishes a guide, of which there was great need, notwithstanding the existence of a Government officer, appointed for the express purpose of keeping these and similar societies in the legal path.

To our surprise we found that Mr. Tidd Pratt's work on the law of building societies contained something more than the act, with a meagre index; and, upon looking into it further, we found so much tolerably good law and good sense well expressed, that we felt convinced it could not be the work of the gentleman who, for some unknown reason, holds the office of Registrar of Friendly Societies; and so it proved, for at length we perceived the author of the book before us to be Mr. W. Tidd Pratt, whereas the registrar is John Tidd Pratt. Mr. W. Tidd Pratt's book is more compact than Mr. Thompson's, and contains some useful suggestions which are not in the latter work; but it has fewer forms, omits several important points, and does not contain the enactments and law relating to friendly societies which are applicable to benefit societies. Mr. Pratt has fallen into a gross mistake in saying, that "the question whether a society can legally advance to any member the 'amount or value of his share or shares for any other purposes than those mentioned in the act, namely, to erect or purchase one or more dwelling-house or dwelling-houses, or other real or personal estate, is not now of much practical importance; for, in the case of Cutbill v. Kingdom," Pollock, C. B., said, that as the society might lend to strangers, it might lend to members. The distinction is, that loans within the express terms of the act are protected from the usury laws; but loans not so expressly authorised would, according to the constitution of every building society in existence, be usurious.

The last work on our list is not a legal compilation, but an original work of considerable merit on the mathematical and prudential considerations upon which the constitution and proceedings of a building society should be framed. In the body of the work Mr. Scratchley discusses the merits of the various forms of building societies, and explains in a popular and impressive manner the results of his calculations, which he gives in detail in an appendix. The following is a summary of the contents of the book:—Chap. 1. Introduction. 2. Of the compound interest. 3. Of building societies as now constituted. 4. Of permanent building societies. 5. The practical management of a building society. 6. The balance-sheets of building societies, [a very important subject, well treated]. 7. Rules for a permanent building society. 8. Of life or fidelity assurance applied to building societies. 9. The act for regulating building societies, and legal decisions. Appendix 1. Of the accumulation of a sum at compound interest. 2. On present value and discount. 3. On the amount and present value of annuities. 4. Tables. To the promoters of building societies who do not act under the advice of a competent actuary, this work is of essential importance.

"There remains one circumstance, in connexion with the operations of building societies, which more particularly deserves the serious consideration of those members who have borrowed money for the purpose of purchasing a house or other property. It has been explained, that when an advance is obtained by a member, a mortgage of the property purchased with it is given by him to the society for a specified number of years, as security for his making during that time certain fixed periodic payments, by which the loan is to be repaid, with interest.

"If the borrower survive the term of his mortgage, and complete the redemption of his property, he will, in most cases, have thus secured an unincumbered provision for his family, and all is well; but if he die before this satisfactory result is attained, unless his successors can continue the redemption payments for whatever number of years remain in the agreement, the building society is under the necessity of foreclosing the mortgage, and reselling the property, in order to recover the remainder of the debt. The late borrower's family consequently find themselves suddenly deprived of a provision on which they had calculated; and whatever sum they may recover from the sale of the house, after complete payment of the society's claims, it would, under such circumstances, be but small in comparison with the advantage which had naturally been expected by them before his death.

"This difficulty in the position of the borrower can only be surmounted by the application of life assurance, which alone affords the certainty of monetary payments adapted to the contingencies of human life. It is exactly one of the cases that life assurance is specially prepared to meet; the contingency to be provided against being, the chance of a given life

'dying before the expiration of a given number of years.

"Were the borrower's debt to remain undiminished until the end of the specified time, and were that time a fixed number of years, then, by taking out an ordinary temporary policy on his life for that period, equal to the amount of his debt, he would secure the necessary sum payable to his family in the event of his decease at any intermediate time. But in consequence of the claim on the property diminishing every year, and in fact every month, the policy can, at the option of the assured, be made of such a kind as to adapt itself to the decrease in various ways more advantageous to him, and suited to each particular case."

The present State of the Law of Racing, Waggings, and Gaming. Also a few unreported cases; the Statutes to the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend a possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, JUNE 8, 1850.

It is with great satisfaction that we have seen the rejection, by a considerable majority, in the House of Lords, of the bill brought in by the Bishop of London for a Court of Ecclesiastical Appeal. A more subtle attempt to transfer the supreme authority in ecclesiastical matters from the Crown to the ecclesiastical body, than was embodied in this bill, it would be difficult to imagine. And, except for that purpose, it was utterly unnecessary and useless. Its machinery had, no doubt, an imposing effect; but, for all practical purposes, the new court could do no more than is or may be done under the existing law, viz. procure for the Judicial Committee the evidence of ecclesiastics on any question of doctrine. The real difference—the only and the important difference—was this: that the report of the new court, upon any question of doctrine, was to be binding on the Judicial Committee, and therefore, in effect, on the Crown; while, according to the present law and practice, the Judicial Committee need not take as conclusive the evidence of any given class or number of ecclesiastical witnesses as to the fact of doctrine. We say that, by the Bishop of London's bill, the report of the new ecclesiastical court was to be binding on the Crown; for the distinction attempted to be made by those who argued in support of the bill, that it was to be binding on the Judicial Committee, and not on the Crown, is idle—a subtlety more fit to be addressed to a society of Jesuits, or of special pleaders, than of English legislators. For, although in terms the bill professed to make the report of the bishops binding only on the Judicial Committee, it proposed to make it binding on that tribunal to the extent of compelling them to report to the Crown the fact as found by the bishops. Now as, in the class of cases that would have to be referred to the new court, there would rarely be any doubt about the law, when the fact was once established, it would be idle to talk of the Crown having any substantial power of deciding left to it. It would be bound to take its facts from the bishops; and the fact being, at least, as we have observed, in many cases, the only thing about which there could be a difference, it would, in effect, surrender its whole authority into the hands of a sort of ecclesiastical jury.

In fact, the present system is, that the Judicial Committee acts for the Crown as judge and jury, taking its evidence in matters of doctrine from ecclesiastical witnesses. The Bishop of London's plan would be, to substitute for this, the ancient and established course of procedure, a standing ecclesiastical body, composed of men, in general, publicly pledged to particular opinions on doctrine, and that body would be taken on all occasions, not to inform itself of the fact, but to know the fact. We may well, as laymen, thank God that such a measure has been rejected by the House of Lords. The analogy which the supporters of the bill attempted to establish between the practice of the Court of Chancery and other Courts, and the proposed practice, has no existence. But the practice of all the Courts in reference to matters of foreign information, is consistent with the practice pursued by the Judicial Committee, as at present constituted, in matters ecclesiastical. The practice of the Court of Chancery, when it seeks assistance on questions of law, is to send for the opinion of a Court of law; which it generally follows, no doubt—not because it is bound by it, but because it has respect for the opinion of the Court of law; otherwise wherefore should it have required that opinion? In matters of foreign law, in matters of science, medical, chemical, mechanical, or otherwise, Courts of law and equity examine learned persons as witnesses; but they are not bound by their statements; they may, and frequently do, disbelieve the witnesses, and refuse to act upon their statements as evidence. The Court and the jury, when there are both, and the Court when the Court is judge both of the law and the fact, invariably receive the statements of witnesses as evidence, more or less credible, more or less intelligible, more or less establishing particular facts; but they are not bound to take, and sometimes do not take, the facts to be as the witnesses state them.

Now, if the object of the bill was not to transfer to the members of the Church, composing the synod of prelates, the absolute authority to declare what is or is not the doctrine of the Church, it did nothing. If it were to leave in the Crown the power of saying it is not satisfied with the evidence, or of deciding what is the result of the evidence, it would leave matters just where they are. For both as to the Crown, and as to every Court before which now, directly or indirectly, questions of religious doctrine may come, the course in practice is, to consult with and take the evidence of learned men, and to decide according to the facts proved by them. According to the present law, then, the Judicial Committee, in a case involving the question, what is the doctrine of the Church, ascertains the fact by the assistance of inquiries as large as it may think requisite; and, with such means at its disposal, it can ascertain, not merely the opinions of a portion of the Church, but the doctrines, the opinions, and the doubts of the Church generally. By the effect of the new bill, the Judicial Committee would be powerless to ascertain anything beyond the opinions of a certain body of prelates, whose opinions might or might not correctly represent the doctrine of the Church, but whose opinions would nevertheless be conclusive evidence of the fact.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.

June 3, 1850.

The Right Hon. CHARLES CHRISTOPHER LORD COTTEHAM, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. HENRY LORD LANGDALE, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. Sir LANCELOT SHADWELL, Vice-Chancellor of England, the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, and the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES WIGRAM, doth hereby, in pursuance of an act of Parliament passed in the fourth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery," and of an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the Fourth Year of the Reign of her present Majesty, intituled 'An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery,'" and of an act passed in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for amending certain Acts of the Fourth and Fifth Years of the Reign of her Majesty, for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery, and for providing for the Discharge of the Duties of the Subpoena-office after Death, Resignation, or Removal of the present Patentees of that Office," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, ORDER AND DIRECT, that all and every the rules, orders, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, GENERAL ORDERS AND RULES OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY, viz.:-

I. Every decree or order of reference is to be brought into the Master's office, by the party having the carriage thereof, within ten days after the same shall have been passed and entered, and in default thereof any other party to the cause or matter is to be at liberty to bring in the same, and such party shall have the carriage of the proceedings under such decree or order, unless the Master shall otherwise specially direct.

II. If upon the warrant taken out for considering the decree or order of reference, or at any time during the reference, it shall appear to the Master, with respect to the whole or any portion of the proceedings, that the interests of the parties can be classified, he is to be at liberty to require the persons constituting each or any class to be represented by the same solicitor; and if the parties constituting such class cannot agree upon the solicitor to represent them, the Master is to be at liberty to nominate such solicitor for the purpose of the proceedings before him; and if any of the parties constituting such class shall decline to authorise the solicitor so nominated to act for him, and shall insist upon being represented by a different solicitor, such party shall personally pay the costs of his own solicitor of and relating to the proceedings before the Master with respect to which such nomination shall have been made, and all such further costs as shall be occasioned to any of the parties by his being represented by a different solicitor from the solicitor so to be nominated.

III. The arrangement and regulation of the course of proceedings under each reference are to be wholly subject to the control and direction of the Master, and the Master is to proceed with the reference made to him as speedily as the nature thereof and the business of the office will allow.

IV. The duration of warrants to proceed upon any reference before the Master, is not to be limited to an hour, or any other period of time; and the proceedings upon any warrant are, as far as possible, to be continued consecutively from hour to hour, and from day to day, until the same shall be completed, but not so as to cause unreasonable delay in other causes or matters depending before the Master; and the Master shall therefore be at liberty to adjourn the further hearing of any matter or thing before him to such future day as he shall think fit; and on every such adjournment the parties shall be obliged to attend without a further warrant, unless the Master shall otherwise direct.

V. The Master shall give priority, as far as may be, to exceptions for insufficiency, impertinence, and scandal, and to matters and applications under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, s. 13, and the orders made in pursuance thereof, and to any other matters or applications requiring immediate despatch.

VI. The Master's power to proceed ex parte, in case of the non-attendance of any party on any warrant, shall extend to the case of his non-attendance upon any adjournment of any warrant.

VII. The Master's power to award costs, in case of the non-attendance of any party upon any warrant, is to extend to the case of his non-attendance upon any adjournment of any warrant to a fixed time.

VIII. In all cases when a proceeding has been unduly delayed, by reason of the neglect of any party or his solicitor, the Master shall, in the first report which he shall make on the subject-matter in respect of which such proceeding has been unduly delayed, state specially to the Court the circumstances of such delay, in order that the Court may, if it shall so think fit, in addition to and notwithstanding any costs which the Master may have certified to be paid in the course of the proceedings before him, make such further order in respect thereof as justice shall require.

IX. If it shall appear to the Master that any state of facts, affidavit, or other proceeding before him contains statements which are impertinent, or of unnecessary length, he shall be at liberty (without any application made to him for the purpose) to disallow such matter, distinguishing by his initials in the margin the parts so disallowed; and he shall cause a memorandum of his having disallowed such impertinent matter to be indorsed on the office copies of the draft of his report, as to the particular inquiry on which such state of facts, affidavit, or other proceeding shall have been used before him; and in the taxation of costs, no costs shall be allowed to the parties by or on whose behalf such state of facts, affidavit, or other proceeding was brought into the Master's office, for or in respect of the matter so disallowed, and the Taxing Master shall allow to the other parties to the suit or matter all such costs as have been incurred by or occasioned to them by reason of the matter so disallowed; and such costs shall be paid by the party by or on whose behalf such state of facts, affidavit, or other proceeding was so brought in.

X. In all proceedings before the Master, where he is attended by counsel, the allowances on the taxation of costs in respect of the fees to such counsel are to be regulated upon the same principle as if the proceedings were before the Court.

XI. The costs of procuring the attendance of counsel before the Master are to be allowed in the taxation of costs as between party and party, in all cases in which the Master shall certify such attendance to be proper, and in no other case.

XII. In case of the absence, from illness or otherwise, of any Master to whom any cause or matter is referred, any other Master may, with his concurrence, act in the place of the Master so for the time being absent; but any order or other proceeding to be made or had by or before such Master so acting is to be entered as made or had by or before him for or in the place of the Master to whom the reference is made.

XIII. The Masters are forthwith and from time to time to meet and consider such additional orders or regulations as may appear to them, or the majority of them, calculated to expedite and facilitate the satisfactory transaction of the business of the suitors in their offices, and to report such additional orders or regulations to the Lord Chancellor, to the end that, if the same should be approved by him, proper steps may be taken for such additional orders or regulations being adopted and duly made general rules and orders of the Court.

XIV. The Registrars are forthwith and from time to time to meet and consider such orders or regulations as may appear to them, or the majority of them, calculated to expedite and facilitate the satisfactory transaction of the business of the suitors in their office, and to report such orders or regulations to the Lord Chancellor, to the end that, if the same be approved by him, proper steps may be taken for such orders or regulations being adopted and duly made general rules and orders of the Court.

XV. That this Order be drawn up and entered by the Registrar of the said Court.

BROOM'S PRACTICE.—THE PRACTICE of the SUPERIOR COURTS of COMMON LAW with reference to Matters within their concurrent Jurisdiction. By HERBERT BROOM, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, Author of "A Selection of Legal Maxims."

"Mr. Broom has an established reputation. His thoughtful and excellent law maxims, and his useful book on 'Parties to Actions,' have well prepared the legal public for another work at his hands, and for such cordial reception as this most richly deserves. It is without exception the fullest, the most lucid, and the most accurate book on practice yet published. We look with great interest for the second volume, when we shall notice the whole work at length."—Law Magazine for May, 1850.

LONDON, JUNE 15, 1850.

THE people of this country appear just now to have adopted the idea, not merely that there is much in the law and its administration that requires reform, but that every legal institution must necessarily be the better for change; and accordingly any proposition respecting the law, so that it be but to change the law, or the functions of any class of lawyers, is hailed with approbation in the House of Commons. If the change be one apparently prejudicial to the supposed interests of the Bar, its popularity is of course doubled.

To the conductors of this journal certainly not much of prejudice against legal reform can be imputed. They have been always among the first to suggest reforms, and among the foremost in urging on the Profession a ready and liberal reception of the reforms proposed by those who have the power of making them. They may claim, therefore, some share of confidence and attention when they oppose the too prevalent desire of changing everything in and about the law for the mere sake of change, and of changing legal institutions of great importance at a moment's notice.

The particular proposition on foot, to the discussion of which these remarks tend, is, of course, that of abolishing the office of Lord Chancellor, and dividing it into a Chief Judge in Equity and a political Chancellor. Upon this subject some very plausible but common-place arguments often have been, and will again be, put forward. The principal argument for the separation is based upon the assumption that great inconvenience to suitors arises: first, out of the pressure on the Chancellor's time of his political duties; secondly, out of his being necessarily a keen political partisan; and thirdly, out of the change of judge with any change of Administration.

As to the objection of the heavy taxes on the Chancellor's time and attention, if it were found that in consequence of them the Chancellor's judicial business was not done, and that arrears continued to accumulate, there might be something in the argument. But if, as is on the contrary the general fact, and as certainly was the fact while Lord Cottenham was in the enjoyment of health, the Chancellor's judicial business is done, and thoroughly well done, the question, whether the Chancellor is overworked, is one for the consideration of the person who fills the office of Chancellor, and if he does not complain, the public at least need not. The truth is, that the Chancellor's judicial business is not heavy—at least, for such a mind as a man must possess to be at all fit to be a Chancellor. The judicial business of the Court of Chancery, with the exception of the lunacy business, which is neither very large nor very difficult, consists, as all equity lawyers know, almost exclusively of appeals; and though such business is of great importance and difficulty, it is not, in point of quantity, at all to compare with the business of the other judges.

The next objection, that a Chancellor must be a keen political partisan, might be an objection, if it could be shewn that in being so he differs from other judges, or that his being so ever produces a practical maladministration of justice. Now, it is scarcely necessary to point out that three-fourths of all the judges who have ever sat upon the bench have been keen political partisans; and that they are necessarily so, because, under our much, and perhaps justly, praised political institutions, few lawyers ever reach the bench except through the House of Commons, and as staunch supporters of some political party. It is idle to suppose that a man, who has been a keen Whig, or Liberal, or Tory from the age of thirty to that of fifty, loses immediately all his opinions and feelings merely because he ascends the bench. The contrary is known to be the fact; and on the fixed bench, if we may be pardoned the expression, at this day are seated many men of notoriously strong political opinions. As to any supposition that a Chancellor may be less upright because he is removable, it is founded on a total misconception of the real nature of his tenure of office. The so-much-valued independence of the judges, secured in the reign of William III, was and is their personal and individual independence, not their independence connected with their party or opinions. A Judge of the common law, or a Vice-Chancellor, not being a minister, would be personally dependent, to some extent, on the will of the Crown, if his position were not, as it is, secured by act of Parliament. But the Chancellor, being always one of the most important men of the Ministry to which he belongs, is personally as independent of the Crown as if he held the office quamdiu bene se gesserit. The party, of which he is always a leading member, may go out, and he with it; but the Crown cannot turn out a Chancellor, unless it is strong enough to turn out his party. The notion, therefore, of there being any pressure on a Chancellor arising out of the influence of the Crown, we take to be a mere piece of fiction, capable of supporting a rounded period, but quite incapable of being supported by sound argument.

The supposed inconvenience of the Chancellor going out with each Ministry, with reference to its operation in causing delay and expense to the parties to part heard causes, is next to be considered. Now, this is a mere question of proportion. Such an inconvenience must occur occasionally, whether the Chancellor be a minister or a fixed judge, because judges, however irremovable by human causes, must, at least, die like other people; and, if it be borne in mind that men are very seldom made Chancellors till they are comparatively old, it may be, perhaps, assumed that, looking at the average duration of Ministries in this country, death and decline of health would make as many removals of Chancellors as would arise from changes of Ministry. But, however this may be as a statistical fact, the remedy is obvious and simple. If by an act of Parliament every Chancellor, on going out, were to remain capable of hearing, and bound to hear, and empowered to give a binding judgment in all cases partly heard before himself, the difficulty would be at an end.

We believe we have noticed the principal objections which it has occasionally been, and is now again, the fashion to make to the present constitution of the Chancellor's office. Let us now look at some of the considerations in its favour. Before dismembering the high office of Lord Chancellor, it should be considered what indirect political benefit arises from the existence of so high an office, attainable by any man, however humble his birth, if his talents, his industry, and his force of character are great. In every community there are ambitious spirits, whose tendency is to be rulers over men, and who will be rulers per fas aut nefas. In this country such men become legitimately rulers, as leaders in the cabinet, chancellors, archbishops, commanders-in-chief; and much of the political tranquillity of our country depends upon the fact, that there are a few such positions, which are little less than regal.

But to take a somewhat lower view, and consider only the effect on the Profession, and through it on the suitors. It is beyond question that it is to the advantage of suitors that the Bar should be composed of a high class of men; we do not mean high in the sense merely of high birth or great wealth, but high in the tone of their minds and feelings. And it is equally beyond question that nothing so much aids the growth of such feelings in the Bar, as the knowledge that the head of the Profession is in power and honour next only to the Sovereign, or to the First Minister of the State; and that though to no mediocrity can such a prize in life be accorded, yet to all it is open; and that the struggle to reach it ennobles and invigorates even those who are not winners in the race. If there were no higher office to be obtained by toiling at the Bar, than that of a county court judge, there would assuredly be no Broughams, nor Lyndhursts, nor Cottenhams at the Bar. And if the highest attainable prize was to be one of the three equal chiefs, though there might still be great men in the Profession, it would not, as it now does, attract within its ranks all that is brightest in intellect, and strongest in heart, in the infinitely varied classes of this community.

REGULA GENERALIS.

TRINITY TERM, 13 VICTORIA.

The following rules regulating the practice of this Court have been promulgated by the authority of the Judges:—

Whereas, by an act made and passed in the 11th and 12th years of the reign of her present Majesty, intitled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Administration of the Criminal Law," it is amongst other things enacted, that when any person shall have been convicted of any treason, felony, or misdemeanour, before any court of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or court of quarter sessions, the judge, or commissioner, or justices of the peace, before whom the case shall have been tried, may, in his or their discretion, reserve any question of law which shall have arisen on the trial for the consideration of the Justices of either Bench and Barons of the Exchequer.

That the judge, or commissioner, or court of quarter sessions, shall thereupon state, in a case signed in the manner now usual, the question or questions of law which shall have been so reserved, with the special circumstances upon which the same shall have arisen, and such case shall be transmitted to the said Justices and Barons.

And whereas it is expedient that regulations be made for the convenience of the Court established under the said recited act.

It is ordered, that when any case shall be transmitted by a court of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or court of quarter sessions, for the consideration of this Court, the original case, signed by the judge, or commissioner, or chairman of sessions reserving the question of law, and seventeen copies of such case, one for each judge, and one for each party, shall be delivered to the clerk of this Court, at the Exchequer Chamber

Westminster, at least four days before the day appointed for the sitting of the said Court.

That every case transmitted for the consideration of this Court briefly state the question or questions of law reserved, and such facts only as raise the question or questions submitted. If the question turn upon the indictment, or upon any count thereof, then the case must set forth the indictment, or the particular count.

That no case be heard upon any demurrer to the pleadings.

That every case state whether judgment on the conviction was passed, or postponed, or the execution of the judgment respited, and whether the person convicted be in prison, or has been discharged on recognisance of bail to appear and receive judgment, or to render himself in execution.

That when any case is intended to be argued by counsel, or by the parties, notice thereof be given to the clerk of this Court at least two days previously to the sitting of the said Court.

That with every case delivered to the Judges of this Court (except such cases as shall be reserved by such Judges) the fee payable to the clerks of the said Judges shall not exceed the fee payable on "demurrer and other paper books," as contained in the table of fees allowed and sanctioned by the Judges, pursuant to the stat. 1 Vict. c. 30.

Reviews.

Counsel to Inventors of Improvements in the Useful Arts.
By THOMAS TURNER, of the Middle Temple. 12mo., pp. 109. [Elsworth.]

Mr. Turner has already proved his qualification for the office of adviser to inventors, by his clever and original Treatise on Copyright in Designs in Art and Manufactures, (noticed 13 Jur., part 2, p. 270). The title of his present little work suggests a more adventurous design; for no men are more stiff-necked and impatient of advice than projectors. Inventiveness, real or imaginary, is a disease wherein the patient generally prefers to minister to himself. The title of the book, however, is almost a misnomer; for the author is very seldom didactic, though every sentence gives the reader occasion to think. The book abounds in suggestions, or rather in suggestive anecdotes and allusions, derived from an extensive and accurate knowledge of the history of invention in this country. Brief allusions to a statement of the various patent cases decided on in our courts serve to convey a clear notion of the principle of the law relating to patents, which consists of nothing more than the decisions in those cases, founded on the famous exception in the Statute of Monopolies.

In the first part, Mr. Turner describes the class of inventors, and the various forms, modes, and accidents of invention, in a style of which the following extracts may serve as specimens:—

"The supply of this article—inventiveness—must be obtained from any source that will yield it. All classes send more or less to market. Some authors love to dwell on contributions to practical science—of working men, Stephenson and Arkwright, Radcliffe, Crompton and Hargreave, and, less absolutely, Wall. But the list of engineers is spangled here and there with titles and coronets: a scientific instrument renders us familiar with the name of Orrery." [The Earl of Orrery was, however, merely the patron of Rowley, who copied the original instrument by Graham.] "The Stanhope printing press was a decided advance in the most intellectual of manufacturing arts. The Marquis of Worcester is conspicuous among the inventors of the past; and steam owes something to Lord Dundonald among those of the present."

"We have been speaking of the objects of invention, and now come to the means to be employed; and, on this head, the first rule must be, before commencing the future, to look into the past. Too much stress cannot be laid upon it. 'It is a maxim equally to be regarded in art and science, that the man who aspires to fortune or to fame by new discoveries, must be content to examine with care the knowledge of his contemporaries, or to exhaust his energies in attempting again what he will most probably find has been better done before.' . . . But it is not only his predecessors' learning that must be mastered—he must diligently acquaint himself with all the accessible science that exists in his own time. To do this completely is, indeed, impossible; and, even as to the attainable extent, the subject is too long and too difficult to be treated here. Nor has the process of invention ever been methodised into a systematic form; the materials for such a work lie widely scattered throughout the province of mechanics and chemistry on the one hand, and logical and metaphysical science on the other. There are no schools for contrivance—no professors of the art of useful design."

Mr. Turner then refers to the admirable discoveries of Herschell, and the useful, though far inferior, works of Whewell and Babbage. We think he errs when he describes Mill's Logic as a work "which may be referred to as a masterly exposition of the mode of dealing with natural objects and phenomena, their properties, laws, and relations." The first part of Mr. Mill's work is the best treatise on ratiocinative logic with which we are acquainted; but the second part, on inductive logic, which is here referred to, appears to us to be an ingenious and elaborate failure. The author has evidently as little genius for experimental philosophy as Dr. Whewell has for metaphysical, and may be cited, with Lord Bacon, as an illustration of the remark, that, with the exception of Aristotle, no man has ever excelled at once in physics and metaphysics. The student of natural philosophy might, indeed, study the details of the nervous organism with much more profit than Mr. Mill's second volume.

In the second part, which comes more within our province, Mr. Turner treats of the legal rights of inventors—of secret processes, of patents, and of registration. Here his explanations are systematic, lucid, and accurate, and singularly concise. We have only space for two more extracts. The first, on the title to a patent:—

"Even where the patent states the object or purpose with precision, it may divulge little of the means employed, which constitute the difficulty, and therefore the merit, of the invention. But then it is necessary, in stating the end or object, to understand clearly the 'nature and reason of the utility, and look forward to the probable or possible range of application it may be capable of. Thus, a combination of flexible wire, with a coating or covering of gutta percha, was claimed as a mode of making bands and straps for harness, carriages, &c.; but this could hardly be deemed to include the unforeseen use of such on the electric telegraph wires, which cannot fairly be considered as bands or straps. When any mention of the means employed does appear in the title, it is usually under general expressions, such as 'a certain vegetable substance,' 'a certain elastic mineral,' &c. Under the modern acts, however, a patentee may at any time, by leave of the Attorney-General, disclaim a part of his invention which encumbers or endangers the rest, giving the public notice of his intention, and subject to opposition; but he must take good heed to disclaim really, not verbally. If the patent be for pumps and oscillating steam-engines, he may safely drop one or the other subject; but if he disclaim the word 'oscillating,' he really extends his claim, and so vitiates his patent."

After explaining the niceties of the "specification," Mr. Turner says—

"The best advice that can be given to the claimant is to get first a clear and vivid conception of his idea, and the principles of science it relies on, and a familiarity with the mode of practising it, and then to put it into professional hands, employing a competent man, which involves the paying him for his trouble. A good patent is worth this. As to a flying machine, the owner prudently saves agency by writing his own specification."

Lincoln's Inn, its Ancient and Modern Buildings, with an Account of the Library. By WILLIAM HOLDEN SPILSBURY, Librarian. 12mo., pp. 340.

This is an agreeably-written guide book by a gentleman of education, who has had access to the best sources of information. The description of the details of that marvel of modern architecture, the new Hall and Library, is excellently given, in very choice terms of art. But the principal and most interesting part of the work is the account of the library, and notices of the many rare printed books and valuable manuscripts with which it has from time to time been enriched by the judicious liberality of numerous donors. Passing over the well-known works which are expected to be found in such a library as a matter of course, Mr. Spilsbury gives an interesting classified catalogue raisonnée of the vast stores of ancient and foreign law books, and historical and other works of unfrequent occurrence, contained in the collection under his care.

The Law relating to Transactions on the Stock Exchange. By HENRY KEYSER, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. 12mo., pp. 357. [H. Butterworth.]

Mr. J. J. Wilkinson's Treatise on the Law relating to the Public Funds was published in 1839, and, though an accurate and able performance, has not yet reached a second edition. The present work has the advantage of containing the recent cases, including those relating to the sale of shares in joint-stock companies. It also contains some information on a few subjects which were not noticed by Mr. Wilkinson. But in every other respect it is an inferior work, and is not always accurate. There is little reference to general principles of law. Notices of the cases are thrown together with scarcely any regard to arrangement, and consequently with little or no intimation, by the usual signs, of the change of subject; and occasionally some obsolete case or principle is separated by many pages from the enactment or decision which has superseded it. Thus, at p. 51, it is said that

"South Sea Annuities are, by act of Parliament, considered merely as such, and are exactly in the case of a common annuity payable half-yearly, where the annuitant dies before the half year is completed; so that the purchaser of a life interest in such annuities is not entitled to receive the half-yearly dividend payable on them if the annuitant die before the dividend becomes payable."

The Apportionment Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, is not noticed here, but at p. 242; and even there there is no intimation of the doubt that has been raised, whether it applies to annuities existing before it passed, and subsequently assigned or bequeathed for partial interests. At p. 34 we have an example of the reference to cases without any perception or indication of the distinctions which they establish, and leading naturally to an apparent contradiction:—

"A legacy of 'all my stocks that I may be possessed of at my &c.,' no particular stock being referred to, is not rendered specific by the pronoun 'my.' (Parrott v. Worsfold, 1 J. & W. 594).

"The words 'of my stock,' or 'in my stock,' or 'part of my stock,' render a legacy specific.

"Many cases have established the principle, that the word 'my' suffices to render a legacy of stock specific. (2 Bro. C. C. 708; 5 Ves. 461; 2 Mad. 280; 1 J. & W. 102)."

As an example of the misarrangement of the matter, and of the consequences, we may refer to pp. 223, 233. In the former page the decision of Sir J. Knight Bruce, in Wynne v. Price, (13 Jur. 295), that scrip certificates for shares in a joint-stock company are legally saleable, overruling Jackson v. Cocker, (4 Beav. 59), is cited. That is followed by a statement of the decision in Roy v. Burton, (5 Dowl. 452), which is a mere technical point of pleading. Then come The Sheffield &c. Railway Company v. Woodcock, (7 M. & W. 574); Bagshaw v. The Eastern Union Railway Company, (7 Hare, 114); Ross v. Moore, (1 C. B. 227); and Dun-craft v. Albrecht, (12 Sim. 189), cases relating to the sale of shares, including a case (Archer v. Williams, 2 Car. & K. 26) relating to the deposit of scrip; and then for the first time, and without renewed intimation that it has been overruled, is Jackson v. Cocker stated; and Phene v. Gillam (5 Hare, 1) is cited as deciding the same point, although that case had nothing to do with scrip, and contains no reference to Jackson v. Cocker.

By GEORGE SPENCE, Esq., Q.C.

* * * Vol. 1 may be had, price 1l. 11s. 6d. boards.

"... A work which promises to be one of the most learned and philosophical treatises on the largest branch of British jurisprudence which our language has produced."—Law Times, Oct. 6, 1849.

"... The reader, however, will be surprised at the mass of information which it contains; all the principal branches of learning are explored. There never was less book-making in any book than in this."—Law Magazine, N. S., No. 8.

"A mass of matter, cases, arguments, and discussions, thrown together in a work of such bulk, is like a library containing as many different works as this contains cases. ... presenting the authorities on each point in the ipsissima verba of judicial decisions, but connecting, modifying, approving, or condemning them in his own words, which will be deservedly considered of little less weight by the student than the dicta to which they relate."—Law Magazine, No. 22.

"A more dense mass of living law, available alike for study, reference, and practice, has seldom been presented to the Profession."—Jurist, No. 668, Oct. 27, 1849.

The present State of the Law of Racing, Wagers, and Gaming. Also a few unreported cases; the Statutes in the present Time; with some Miscellaneous Information.

OPINIONS of the PRESS.
 "There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

LONDON, JUNE 22, 1850.

IN a late case (Dobson v. Land, 14 Jur. 288) it has been decided by Wigram, V. C., that if a mortgagee of household property, who is not entitled to insure the premises by express contract, nevertheless does insure them without the privity of the mortgagor, he will not be entitled, on redemption by the mortgagor, to add the premiums of insurance to his mortgage debt. With great deference to the learned judge who decided that case, we venture to submit the following reasons why, it is conceived, that decision cannot be supported.

At law the mortgagee is the absolute owner of the mortgaged premises, and may deal with the property in all respects as if it were his own; he may fell timber, pull down houses, and commit all manner of waste, without incurring any liability to answer to the mortgagor for such proceedings in a court of law; and, before the jurisdiction of our Courts of equity had arisen, an unfortunate mortgagor, who had allowed his mortgage to become absolute at law, was without remedy, and lost his estate for ever. It is only through the medium of the Court of Chancery that the mortgagor can control the rights of ownership which the legal estate confers upon the mortgagee. Now, what is the principle on which the Court of Chancery interferes with those legal rights? That Court has never said that the mortgagee shall exercise none of his legal rights; that Court never, for instance, restrains the mortgagee from bringing ejectment to obtain possession; nor, if the security be not otherwise ample, will it restrain the mortgagee from exercising his legal right to fell timber. (Witherington v. Banks, Sel. Cas. Ch.). If the mortgagee, who is absolute owner at law, exercise his legal rights fairly and reasonably, for the better securing of his mortgage debt, the Court of Chancery will not restrain him, but, on the contrary, considering those legal rights as part of the mortgagee's security for his debt, will decree redemption to the mortgagor only upon the terms of his indemnifying the mortgagee from all the expenses which the latter may have incurred in their fair and reasonable exercise. It is on this principle, that, if a mortgagee has made a settlement of the mortgage, the mortgagor must pay the costs of all the parties which such settlement has made necessary parties to a suit for redemption, notwithstanding that they are made necessary parties by the act of the mortgagee alone. (Wetherall v. Collins, 3 Mad. 255). "It seems at first sight," said Sir J. Leach, in giving judgment in this case, "a great hardship that the mortgagor is to pay the costs of persons claiming under the mortgagee, and made necessary parties by his act; but it is the constant practice of this Court, and is to be supported on this principle, that, at law, after a mortgage is forfeited, the estate is the absolute property of the mortgagee, and he may deal with it as his own; and that if the mortgagor comes for the redemption which the equity of this Court gives him, it must be upon the terms of indemnifying the mortgagee from all costs arising out of his legal acts."

It is on the same principle that a mortgagee of renewable leaseholds may, without express contract, renew, and add the expense of renewal to his mortgage debt. The legal estate gives him the legal right to renew: this legal right is a part of the security for his debt, and if it be exercised by him, the Court of Chancery will decree redemption only upon the terms that the expense thereby incurred shall be repaid him by the mortgagor. (Manlove v. Ball, 2 Vern. 84).

X

In the case we are now considering, the mortgagee, in virtue of his legal estate, and as absolute owner at law, has an insurable interest in the property, and a legal right to insure in his own name. (1 Ph. Ins. 108). Now, when we consider how entirely dependent the mortgagee's security is on the safety of the household property, and that should this property be destroyed by fire the mortgagee's security for his debt would be entirely gone, it must be conceded, that to insure is only a reasonable and fair exercise of the legal right which the mortgage-deed has given to the mortgagee, by conferring upon him an insurable interest. If it be said that the mortgagee must take the consequence of his own want of precaution, in not having an express contract that he might insure, it may be answered, that the mortgagor must rather take the consequence of not inserting in the mortgage-deed an express provision that the mortgagee should not avail himself of the insurable interest which the mortgage-deed has given him. If the mortgagor wishes to prevent the mortgagee from taking possession, an express proviso is inserted for this purpose; for without such proviso the mortgagee has the legal right at any moment to take possession, and the Court of Chancery will not restrain him from so doing. So also, if the mortgagor wishes to prevent the consequences of the mortgagee insuring, it is incumbent on him to insert an express proviso that the mortgagee shall not insure; for without such proviso the mortgagee has the legal right to insure, and the Court of Chancery will not restrain him. Should the mortgagee insure, then it seems to follow, on the principle laid down by Sir J. Leach in Weatherall v. Collins, that the Court would decree redemption in favour of the mortgagor only upon the terms that he should repay to the mortgagee, not only the mortgage debt, but also the premiums of the insurance.

If this view of the case be correct, it necessarily follows, that should the mortgagee insure, and receive the insurance money from the office, he will be bound to account to the mortgagor for the money so received. This, we would submit, is also established by authority. It was expressly held in Ex parte Andrews, in re Emmott, (2 Rose, 410), that a mortgagee by way of trust, who had insured against a contingency, and had received the insurance money from the office, was bound to account for such money to the mortgagor. The authority of this case was admitted in Dobson v. Land, but the learned judge distinguished the case of Ex parte Andrews from the case before him, on the ground that the former was a trust, and the latter a common mortgage. But we would with deference submit, that whether the mortgage be made by a conveyance to the mortgagee upon trust to repay himself the debt, and subject thereto upon trust for the mortgagor, or whether it be made in the more common way by conveyance with a proviso for redemption, can make no difference to the question at issue. By the conveyance to the mortgagee, he acquires an insurable interest in the property; this insurable interest, which he acquires only through the mortgage-deed, is a part of his security for his debt, and must be held by him upon the same terms as he holds every other interest conferred upon him by that deed, namely, for his own benefit to the extent of his debt, and then for the benefit of the mortgagor. If, therefore, the mortgagee insure, and receive the insurance money from the office, he will be called upon to account for the money so received, in the same manner as for the rents and profits of the mortgaged property.

In conclusion may be mentioned the case of Sidways v. Todd, (2 Stark. 400), where the same principle was recognised. There a wharfinger had, without the privity of the depositor, insured goods deposited in his warehouse. The goods were destroyed by fire, and the wharfinger received the insurance money from the office. It was held, that although a wharfinger was not responsible for goods casually burnt on his premises, yet that, having insured, and received the insurance money from the office, he was bound to account for such money to the depositors. The wharfinger had acquired an insurable interest in the goods by their deposit in his warehouse, but as he held the possession of the goods themselves for the depositors, so he held the insurable interest which such possession gave him for them also.

ERRATA.—In the first line of the fifth paragraph of the Review of Mr. Turner's "Counsel to Inventors," for "discoveries," read "discoveries." In the last line but one of the same paragraph, for "nervous organism," read "nervous organum." The article was by mistake printed without being revised by the author.

OF THE NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

In a case before the Vice-Chancellor of England, under the Orders in Chancery of the 22nd April, (Darby v. Marshall, 8th June), upon an application for leave to file a special claim, leave was refused, principally, it seems, on the ground that the claim did not set out the deed, under which the plaintiff's title to relief arose, with sufficient fullness. It was stated at the bar that those particular portions of the deed under which the equity arose were set out. We humbly conceive that this decision was not in accordance with the spirit of the Orders. The forms given for claims under the 1st Order are, we conceive, to be looked at, not certainly as unchangeable forms, but as models indicative of the sort of pleading that the Orders intend. Now, the forms which refer to deeds are—No. 6, the claim of a mortgagee; No. 7, the claim of a mortgagor for redemption; No. 8, the claim for specific performance; and No. 11, the claim for the appointment of new trustees. In all these the deed is merely referred to; and in No. 6 there is a marginal note expressly directing that the names only of the parties are to be set out, and not the substance or effect of the document. It may be added, that, as the obvious intent of the Orders is to substitute brevity for prolixity in equity pleadings, and to diminish expense; and as the Orders direct the claim to be set forth verbatim in the writ of summons, and a writ to be served on every defendant necessary to be named, the whole intention of the Orders would be defeated if in special claims the deeds under which the equity arises are to be set out. We should rather have thought that it would be impertinent, in a claim, to do more than refer to the deeds, so as to identify them; and that the utmost that could be proper would be to set out any special clause requiring the particular attention of the defendant and the Court.

The question, whether a claim praying an injunction may be filed, was, on the 18th instant, brought specially before Knight Bruce, V. C. His Honor expressed no judicial opinion on it, intimating merely that he would take time to consider; and ultimately the plaintiff abandoned the prayer for an injunction, and filed a common claim; so that the point is yet undetermined. We may add to the reasons already urged why an injunction should be grantable under these Orders, that, if it were not, the Orders are nearly useless. For since there are but few administration suits in which it may not turn out that an injunction will be requisite, so that to pray an injunction is, ex abundanti cautela, nearly always proper; and since it can hardly be the intention of the Orders that a suit should be begun in a mode in which, in a great proportion of the cases, it may become impracticable to continue it, it must be presumed, that, wherever an injunction may, with any degree of probability, be requisite, a bill will be the proper course; in other words, that in nine cases out of ten of the suits contemplated under all the heads of the 1st Order, except Nos. 5, 10, and 11, the Orders will be passed by as inapplicable.

The question, whether special claims should be signed by counsel, has also engaged the attention of the Court, and is the subject of conflict of opinion. In one branch of the Court it would seem that the signature of counsel is required; in the two other branches at present acting it is not. The 6th Order seems to require that the claim should be actually perused, and, in effect, settled by the Court itself. But the framers of the Orders can hardly have intended to impose such a duty on the Court. If, however, the Court ought to read, and be satisfied of the propriety of the claim, of what use is the signature of counsel? On the other hand, if claims are to be settled and signed by counsel, of what use is the motion for leave to file a claim? It might be as well required that counsel should move for leave to file an original bill. What strikes us is, that the time of the Court would be saved, and every useful purpose answered, if special claims were required to be signed by counsel, and, being so signed, might be filed as of right.

TRADES MARKS.

THE progress of useful art has rendered this kind of interest (which hardly occurs in any old reports, and the law of which is the work almost exclusively of authorities now living) a recognised subject of litigation. Within the last three months as many as six cases have found their way into the newspapers; in one of them (Franks v. Weaver) such cases were said to be unfortunately common; and it may be expected to receive further development, as national and international intercourse extends the value of commercial and manufacturing character, and, consequently, of the mark or sign by which it is denoted and guaranteed.

As the subject, though incidentally or collaterally noticed, (see Drewry on Injunctions; a note in Sweet's Jarman, tit. "Patents," vol. 7, p. 467; and the titles "Case" and "Deceit" in the books), has not been treated independently, a review of the recorded cases may be acceptable.

The Subject-matter.—One of the main elements which determines commercial profit or professional remuneration is the quality which arises out of a long course of integrity and skill, and is known as "character, goodwill, reputation, connexion," &c. For the protection of this, if attached to the person, no aid is required from law: Mr. Smith will hardly succeed in persuading the customers that he is Mr. Jones. And if it be of a real nature, it is inseparable from a particular spot—a favourite shop or tavern, for instance; and moveable articles are in some cases equally secure. The work of an old painter may "reject the claim of every other hand," and the flavour of the wine may identify the very spot on the bank of the Rhine which produced it. Failing, however, this natural cognoscibility, the genuine nature of the commodity is usually guaranteed by an artificial symbol—a trades mark.

This applies especially to chemical productions: metals and metallic manufactures, iron and tin, knives and ploughshares are among the cases recorded; culinary sauces, tea, cigars, dyes, and especially medical preparations—the latter with reference, be it observed, to the druggist or vendor, not the inventor or author of the prescription. (See Clark v. Freeman, 12 Jur. 149, and some remarks in the Law Mag., No. 81, p. 236). But the efficacy of the mark applies to any article of which a buyer is unable to verify the source, to which he gives a well-founded or fanciful preference. The wider the distance between producer and consumer, the less chance is there of personal identification: marks, therefore, come very much into play in exportation; and there are many anecdotes of travellers finding themselves preceded in their most advanced explorings by articles bearing the trades mark of the English factory. A public conveyance has the same kind of goodwill attached to it, and is identified by its external appearance, not personally or by locality. Hence the case of Knott v. Morgan, (2 Kee. 213). So, an establishment may be better known by its circulating advertisements and prospectuses, than the place where it is carried on. (See The London and Provincial Law Assurance Society v. The London and Provincial Joint-stock Life Insurance Company, 11 Jur. 938). Finally, we may mention the title of a book: this, indeed, is usually a copyright question, being only pirated along with the literary manufacture itself. An author's name, however, has been sometimes misappropriated to a spurious production: it might be thought that the intrinsic merits of a work were its recommendation, but the title-page, in fact, saves much critical examination; and even the name of the publisher who has purchased the work has its influence. "15s. for this little print; you mean 15d.," said the president to the printseller. "No, Sir Joshua; its price was 15d. yesterday, but your notice of it has altered its value." And as the name not only of an author, but of a periodical or a particular series, supposes identity at least of editorial selection and revision, it has occasionally been a subject of litigation. (Hogg v. Kirby, 8 Ves. 215; Keene v. Harris, cit. 17 Ves. 336; Sealey v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 581).

General Nature of the Right.—The oldest case usually referred to under this head (Southerne v. Howe, 2 Roll. Rep. 26) was an action by a buyer of cloth falsely marked—a branch of the subject which, in later cases, is only alluded to incidentally, probably because the injury to the buyer of a single article is as a fraction of that sustained by the counterfeited party from the piracy as a whole. The nature of the wrong to him is not left by the cases in a settled shape: most of them regard it as a fraud, as similar to the personation of another, or the assumption of an agency for him, (Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84), and operating to "deprive him of profit, by attracting custom on false representations, lead the public to believe" &c. In Knott v. Morgan (2 Kee. 213) the same intention was relied on, and by similar means, both cases expressly repudiating the notion of a substantial specific right in the thing—"no property," "no exclusive right." Crawshaw v. Thompson (4 M. & G. 357; 5 Scott's N. R. 562) went upon fraud, not allowing any weight to a claim, set up and published, to the use of a mark. And in Day v. Day (Eden on Inj. 314) there was said to be no exclusive right—a view of the question which coincides with the cases at law, which all profess to be for "deceit," and not "piracy." Nevertheless, we meet with some indications which seem to shadow out a right of property. Canham v. Jones (2 V. & B. 218) speaks by comparison of an invasion of another's "property"

—an appropriation of the benefit of a valuable interest, in the nature of goodwill, treating the false representation as the means employed to effect the injury. One judgment (Millington v. Fox, 3 My. & C. 338) only distinctly asserts the existence of the right. "No previous case," says Mr. Drewry, "had gone so far;" no subsequent case has, up to the present time, I believe, followed it; "but it was fully argued, and is one of the most careful and elaborate decisions of a cautious judge." "It was very different," Lord Cottenham said, "from the usual cases—those of fraudulent use." There was evidence of a certain amount of innocent infringement of the mark, but which would "not deprive plaintiffs of their right to the exclusive use of it." And in Morison v. Salmon (2 M. & G. 385; 2 Scott's N. R. 449) it was said that the action might be to try a right; that it was like a patent—it might be assignable, or the subject of a license. (Compare also Delondre v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 213).

It is submitted that the doctrine of property is the correct one; that the analogy is closer with patent inventions and copyright, which, though called "incorporeal," are definite subjects, than with personal reputation. The mark is not attached to anything that has belonged to the party, but to a certain commodity for which he is noted, or a particular style of literature, as distinguished from his general intellectual faculties. In Clark v. Freeman the fraudulently affixing the name of a celebrated physician to a kind of pill, was said to be a case of defamation possibly, but not a case of trades mark, because a physician does not sell pills. It may be said that he sells prescriptions, but the pill vendor does not; so that the specific substance is still wanting. Just as, in Martin v. Wright, (6 Sim. 297), a diorama was held to be no piracy of an engraving.

The capability of development and expansion, which the notion of legal property admits of and requires to keep pace with the change of society, is well seen in Prince Albert v. Strange, (13 Jur. 109; 1 Mac. & G. 43); and it seems probable that fraud was at first had recourse to as the least obtrusive mode of placing this matter on the list of civil injuries. Viewed from the other aspect, it is precisely a fraud on the buyer, and it seemed an easy transition to put the same term on the wrong to the supplanted seller. It is a vague class of injury. "Nobody has been able to define fraud," said Lord Langdale, "it is so multifarious." Primarily it implies falsehood (or concealment) practised on a party in communication, and to that meaning it would advantageously have been restricted. Trades-mark cases are analogous to those frauds only where the right of an absent or third party is affected; the creditor of a vendor, for instance, as to whom there is neither suggestio falsi nor suppressio veri, whose property is as it were stolen, just as if his patent had been infringed on; and it will be observed, that the imitation of the mark blends imperceptibly with that of the invention or copyright, under which head it is often entered in the digests and treatises.—It is presumed, and for the credit of the law hoped, that an alien is entitled to full protection on this head, (Pisani v. Lawson, 8 Scott, 182; 6 Bing. N. C. 30), notwithstanding the still unsettled state of alien copyright. An English manufacturer, it is said, is so secured in the United States.

Title.—The title is usually by occupation. Lord Langdale speaks of the person who first used, or was alone in the habit of using; and the length of exercise is noticed in Hine v. Lart (10 Jur. 106) and Crawshaw v. Thompson, (5 Scott's N. R. 562). The original motive for adopting it is immaterial; long use, it was said in the latter case, produces an impression that the mark denotes a particular tradesman; and, on the other hand, a mark originating with an individual becomes, by general usage or habitual infringement, a mere mark of a kind of article. A notification of the individual's intention to use a mark for distinction would probably throw weight into the scale; nor does it seem absurd to anticipate hereafter a general registration of marks, which, to a certain extent, actually exists in America. It is obvious that disuse, as well as acquiescence, would vacate the right; (see Hine v. Lart, 10 Jur. 106); and in a French case, a review, which had altered its title, was not allowed to prevent a new periodical from resuming the old title after an interval of seven months. The duration of the interval would of course be regulated by the frequency of the issue: thus the orders for an exportation may arrive annually.

As to transmission, the right, whether property or negative, is personal; administrable, (Singleton v. Bolton, 3 Dougl. 293), and passing to executors, (see Day v. Day, Eden on Inj. 314, and see Lewis v. Langdon, 7 Sim. 421); the interest in a newspaper going to representatives, (Lord Eldon in Keene v. Harris), and (in Longman v. Tripp, 2 N. R. 67) to a bankrupt's assignees. The use of the author's name accompanies the copyright of his work, but must be kept clear from any addition. (Archbold v. Sweet, 1 Moo. & R. 62; 5 C. & P. 219). A name, however, adopted from the place of business, may really denote the value arising from some personal preference of the maker, or a name really given to a particular mine or factory may be that of some person at one time connected with it. In Mottley v. Downman, (3 My. & C. 1), which Lord Cottenham calls a case of much nicety, the lessee of a manufactory, which had become well known, removed to other premises, carrying the use of the mark with him, under protest from the landlord. As his lease had not expired, he was able to prevent the use of the mark on the old spot for several years. The lease having expired, the landlord claimed for his new tenant the use of the mark, and each party complained of infringement by the other. The Chancellor thought the case too doubtful to act upon, suggesting that both parties might be entitled. No trial seems to have taken place, which would have thrown some light on the jus possessionis of this subject—the effect of a previous right to retard the acquisition by the new establishment, and the ability of the protest, unaccompanied by use or possession, to keep the right on foot. (See also Crutwell v. Lye, 17 Ves. 341, as to the goodwill inherent in a business or an individual).

One condition is always implied in the existence of the right—the mark itself must involve no deceit. In Pidding v. How (8 Sim. 477) assistance was refused to a plaintiff, who advertised, as made in China by one Howqua, packages of tea really made up in his own warehouse. In Perry v. Truefitt (6 Beav. 66) the sanction of the physiologist Blumenbach was attributed to a quack preparation—a practice much in vogue in the present day; and it was debated in the same case whether "Mexican balm" were a "fancy designation," or a false statement of origin. In Sykes v. Sykes (3 D. & Ry. 292) it was deemed no fraud to mark as "patent" an article where the patent had expired, as probably it would have been, had no patent ever existed; unless under the ambiguous denomination of patent medicine. A recent law expressly restricts the use of the word "registered" to articles made, though not necessarily sold, during the existence of the privilege. The analogous rule as to immoral or libellous copyright is well known, and, as in that rule, the onus of establishing the fault would, except in glaring cases, lie on the defendant, and the decision depend on the fastidiousness of the Court. The reporter of one of the medicine cases suggests, that ex turpi causa non oritur actio. Mere fiction, as the nom de guerre of an author, of course does not amount to a fraud. (See Wright v. Tallis, 1 C. B. 893, where Tindal, C. J.,

Form of Marks.—Trades marks were described in one case as names, titles, insignia, devices; in another, names, letters, indicia; and again, as forms, words, symbols, and accompaniments. They are impressed on the article itself, attached to the vessels or covers that contain it, or employed for cards and prospectuses, liveries, &c.; or the entire form, or colour and style of the commodity, or its envelope, may constitute the mark. A name or an inscription is often relied on, and sometimes the form of the letters and arrangement of the printing is characteristic, the visible form being often recognised in foreign countries, where the meaning is unintelligible, just as, in former times, the rarity of the accomplishment of reading led to a sign for every shop. Thus "W C" on iron was said to be known abroad as the comb-mark. The form may be simple, the article or substance allowing, perhaps, only of a single letter, or a particular species of shape; or, on the other hand, the mark may amount to a little ornamental design—an idea apparently referred to in Delondre v. Shaw, (2 Sim. 213), where the maker of a chemical drug marked it with his cross of honour and a serpent, the emblem of his profession; and we sometimes see a crown or the regal initials used, to denote the patronage of royalty. An original or new mark obtains in America an express protection, on the footing of a patent, for seven years: a similar privilege being, by our Designs Act, for some very excellent but inscrutable reason, expressly withheld from a design for a label, wrapper, or other covering, which it classes with immoral designs. It has been stated that a very considerable sum is expended on gold marks and labels for linen exported to the American market.

Infringement.—That which possesses a market value is sure to become the object of depredation, and the fact of a studied imitation goes far to establish the dishonesty of the intention. The copy may be absolute, the same mark-maker being sometimes employed, and in one case illicit impressions of the identical stamp—a modification of the offence illustrated by the cases of Prince Albert v. Strange (13 Jur. 109) and Murray v. Heath, (1 B. & Ad. 84). More usually, however, the object is to retain enough of the original to effect the deception, and add variation enough to ground a denial of the fraud. Thus, in the omnibus case, a single word only was inserted, converting "London Conveyance Company" into "London Conveyances for Company;" but in another case Lord Langdale said, "if critically read, there was much difference, but that the result could not be got at so." In Day v. Day (Eden on Inj. 314) the judge looked for such a general resemblance as would mislead the public—"if any one should study, he would find much difference;" and in another, "not modo et forma; the substance, not the letter." As compared with "Day & Martin, 97, High Holborn," "Day & Martin, 90½, Holborn-hill," (a real address), was said to exhibit sufficient distinctive individuality to persuade the public that they were in some way connected. On the other hand, circumstances may rebut the presumption of bad intention, even where the resemblance is close, as in The London and Provincial Law Assurance Society v. The London and Provincial Joint-stock Life Insurance Company, (11 Jur. 938). There the place of business was different; there was (the title apart) no similarity in the prospectuses, and especially the general run of customers was in one establishment legal, and in the other mercantile men. The deception of the customer, of course, is the object, and "a resemblance calculated to deceive an ordinary purchaser, to mislead the ordinary run." (Rodgers v. Nowell, 5 C. B. 109; 11 Jur. 1039; 6 Hare, 325). In Crawshaw v. Thomp- son, "W. O." was near enough to "W. C." to deceive the unwary; in Morison v. Salmon (2 Scott's N. R. 449) the misrepresentation was sufficient to deceive a person paying ordinary attention; (and see Archbold v. Sweet, where it was not enough that the title was explanatory to the trade). In Spottiswoode v. Clarke, (2 Ph. 154), Lord Cottenham doubted as to the imitation, and contrasted the book, of which the buyer might recognise the contents, with the piece of steel, where the mark was to the eye the sole indication of the quality. Here, he said, "no one could mistake; yet the two wrappers, if designed independently, shewed a remarkable coincidence of ideas; it was difficult to believe it pure accident; yet, if a fraud, it was a clumsy one."

As, in copyright questions, the quantity pirated is immaterial, the virtue of the mark may reside in a special portion, the rest being mere description or surplusage. "Truefitt's Medicated Mexican Balm" was held no infringement on "Perry's Medicated Mexican Balm;" and it may be laid down, that when a proper name is present, it renders the remainder insignificant. "The Registered Paletôt" was no infringement of "Nicoll's Registered Llama Cloth Paletôt;" and the addition of a second name may render the former descriptive, as "Torr's Pills, made by Kirkus;" (and see Singleton v. Bolton, 3 Dougl. 293). In Mottley v. Downman (3 My. & C. 1) the addition of the name of the new locality was urged as an efficient distinction, and objected to, as being only attached to the sides of the boxes, and therefore, when they were piled, invisible. In Hine v. Lart (10 Jur. 106) the material part pirated was the word "Ethiopian," as little of a proper term, in itself, as the word "Mexican," already alluded to; but here no individual designation was present with it. This name of the individual, however, may be supplied by a kind of innuendo. In Franks v. Weaver (10 Beav. 297) the original was "Franks' Specific Solution of" &c.; the defendant called his the "Chemical Solution of" &c., and then "craftily," as the Master of the Rolls said, "subjoined to his instructions testimonials in favour of Franks' solution;" an injunction granted, though it "might possibly not deceive." And in Ransom v. Bentall the use of a small portion of the plaintiff's mark was not permitted, the piracy as to the whole being admitted, and the Vice-Chancellor having no evidence that the part might not deceive.

Much exertion is sometimes made to obtain a ground to claim the right to the name itself. The defendant Day, mentioned above, had entered into an agreement with one Martin to complete the original firm, and the choice of premises had evidently been dictated by the same motive. When Joseph Rodgers & Sons' cutlery was to be supplanted, a John Rodgers was hunted up, and, happening luckily to have a son, he was placed in an imaginary partnership with him, and his articles appeared duly marked as "J. Rodgers & Son." In the cases of Sykes v. Sykes and Lewis v. Langdon the infringing parties were relations of the party infringed upon, and, bearing his name, were willing to turn that part of their inheritance to account. A notice to desist from the use of a mark will not, in itself, make that use a fraud; (Crawshaw v. Thompson); but the absence of secrecy when and where the mark is affixed, urged in defence in Millington v. Fox, and the question in Crawshaw v. Thompson, whether the mark were used to supplant or in execution of the buyer's orders, seem not conclusive, for the fraud may be aimed not at the middleman, but at some ultimate purchaser. In Blofeld v. Payne (1 Nev. & M. 363; 4 B. & Ad. 410) it was admitted that the immediate purchaser was aware of the deceit.

The remedy usually resorted to is that of an injunction, because the object is, as in patents, to prevent the repetition of the act; hence, in Millington v. Fox, the smallness of the amount of injury (6l.) was immaterial, which, as affecting the right itself, might have been an obstacle. (See Baily v. Taylor, 1 Russ. & M. 173). So, in Rodgers v. Nowill, Wilde, C. J., rejected the argument that it was a paltry action. And in a recent case (Pico v. —, MS.) the agency of the Court was not stopped by a premise as to future conduct. The restraint (for the forms of which see Knott v. Morgan, Day v. Day, and Franks v. Weaver) is as to selling, exporting, (see Goss v. Alephoghe, 6 Beav. 69), or using articles marked, and any display or employment of the mark, as cards, &c., or any variation or colourable imitation of them, (see Washbourn v. Osgood—V. C., Feb. 18, 1850—in which the original terms, having been too wide, were narrowed). And as the remedy is peculiarly of an in terrorem nature, and, perhaps, also with an eye to giving fame and publicity to the commodity, copies of the injunction are not unfrequently printed for advertisement or circulation.

As to the title in equity, a sufficient "length of exclusive usage" was referred to in The London and Provincial Law Assurance Society v. The London and Provincial Joint-stock Life Insurance Company (11 Jur. 938) to justify the exercise of summary jurisdiction. In Hine v. Lort a prima facie title (subject to the question of another joint interest) was acted upon to restrain an admitted similarity which might prejudice the plaintiff. But Delondre v. Shaw failed partly on a defect of this kind in the title, but partly, it seems, as being against the counterfeiting the labels, and no sale of the article alleged. The case is obscure. (See Drewry on Inj.) And in Rodgers v. Nowill (6 Hare, 325) the injunction was refused, although under a great probability of damage to the plaintiff.

After an action, of course no such difficulty would occur. The facts as to similarity and fraudulent intention are for the cognisance of the judge, who exercises personal inspection. Lord Eldon said, in Hogg v. Kirby, (8 Ves. 226), "that, until satisfactorily explained, he thought it an imitation." In another case the Vice-Chancellor could not think so close an imitation accidental. But, in reference to proceedings of this kind generally, "each case depends very much on its own special circumstances," (Day v. Day); and "no general rule can be laid down." (Rodgers v. Nowill).

With reference to legal pleading and procedure, the reader is referred to the recent case of Rodgers v. Nowill, in the Court of Common Pleas, (11 Jur. 1139), in which Wilde, C. J., entered into an exposition of the general subject to be considered—"Was the act done, and was it done in a fraudulent way—done in a way likely to deceive, and done with that intent?" It was enough to shew the intention, and the natural result. The plaintiff alleged a fraud, causing a general loss of custom, and also an injury to the reputation of the firm. The objection, that the labels and not the goods were imitated, appears immaterial; in their commercial identity, the goods were imitated. The previous case of Blofield v. Payne (1 Nev. & M. 363; 4 B. & Ad. 410) had dispensed both with the inferiority of the goods and the actuality of the injury.

A penal action is given by stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, (Patent Amendment Act), the only statutory provision on this subject, which imposes a penalty of 50*l.* on the improper use of the name, mark, stamp, or device of a patentee, or of the word "patent," by "letters-patent," or any similar words to imitate the mark of the patentee. The clause, it is said, underwent alteration, being originally drawn for the protection of the public rather than the patentee, who was provided for by common law, and its confused and indeterminate language agrees with this suggestion. The undue assumption of the word "patent" is a legal offence both in France and America.

In the common-law proceeding, the damages, if sought, are duly estimated; but this penalty, being laid on each offence, might, in the case of a button manufacturer, for instance, be multiplied by the million. However, the clumsy framing of the act, under the strict construction required by a penal act, has rendered, and probably will render, it inoperative; at least, it is believed that no case has yet occurred under it. Some precedents for proceeding will be found in the works on Patents by Webster and Hindmarch, and in the latter some comments on the difficulties of interpreting the clause.

Whether legal or equitable remedies be applied for, the marks will, as far as possible, be set out in the declaration or bill, and specimens produced and exhibited in court; noticing, however, that the similarity which may be completely effective between two marks seen by the buyer apart, and at intervals, may vanish when the articles lie side by side, and the production of a suite of average specimens in general use would either heighten or dissipate the similarity apparent by the sole exhibition of the two individuals, and substitute the proportional for the absolute resemblance.

In conclusion, it is matter of regret that cases of this class, which are already numerous, (many of them, being unopposed, or ex parte, are only mentioned, if at all, in the newspapers), and likely to multiply, cannot, by some cheap and summary tribunal, escape the heavy cost of an application to a Chancery judge, whose time is wasted* on an adjudication for which a man of business would often, by his familiarity with the subject, be actually better fitted: a doctrine recognised in a neighbouring country by the transference of all such matters to the "conseil de prudhommes," and by our own forefathers, among whom they were to some extent at least regulated by the guilds or companies. THE Court of Criminal Appeal, established under the stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, has been productive of much benefit in defining and fixing, by well-considered decisions, that branch of law which comes within its cognisance. We propose to give to our readers a summary of the more recent of these decisions, in the hope that they may be found useful at this period of approaching quarter sessions and assizes.

First, as to the jurisdiction of the tribunal itself, it is decided not to extend to judgments upon demurrer; (Reg. v. Faiderman, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 377); and it is expressly declared, by the New Order of Trinity Term, 13 Vict., that no case is to be heard upon any demurrer to the pleadings.

One class of cases refers to the definition of offences.

1. Embezzlement and Larceny.—The distinction between larceny and embezzlement by a servant has been clearly pointed out in the case of *Reg. v. Watts. The prisoner was a clerk in the Globe Assurance Office, and he was found guilty of stealing a piece of paper, (a returned paid cheque), the property of the directors. It appeared, that, by the course of business between the company and its bankers, the paid cheques were returned to the directors, and became their vouchers; and that it was one of the prisoner's appointed duties to receive and keep for his employers such returned cheques. The conviction was affirmed, upon the ground that the paper had reached its ultimate destination when it came to his keeping, and that such keeping, being for his masters, made his possession theirs†. † The prisoner was a shareholder in the company, but this was held to make no difference, because, as such, he had no property in the paper.

case was distinguished, for this reason, from Reg. v. Masters, (Den. C. C. 332), where the duty of the servant was to hand money over to another servant of his master, and the first one, having fraudulently retained it, was held guilty of embezzlement.

In Reg. v. Adey (19 L. J., M. C., 149) the prisoner was employed by two overseers, as their servant, to collect poor-rates in a parish in which there were two overseers and two churchwardens. As such collector, he obtained and embezzled a tenant's rate from a landlord. It was held, that although the overseers could not have enforced this payment from the landlord, the money was received by the prisoner by virtue of his employment, and on account of his masters, and that it might be described as the property of the two overseers. (See also Reg. v. Hawkins, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 513).

Where the prisoner went away with the prosecutor's wife, assisted her in placing wearing apparel in a box, and removing it from her husband's house, and afterwards, while she remained in adultery with him, pledged some of the articles, and applied the money to his own purposes, the following direction to the jury was held to be correct: first, if they were of opinion that the prisoner, going away with the prosecutor's wife for the purpose of adulterous intercourse, was engaged jointly with her in taking the goods; or, secondly, if the prisoner, though not a party to the original taking or removal, had appropriated any of the goods to his own use, he was guilty of larceny. (Reg. v. Thompson, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 488).

A drover, employed by the prosecutors to drive pigs, and paid wages by the day for the driving, but being at liberty to drive the cattle of other persons, sold the pigs at the end of his journey, and converted the proceeds to his own use. The Court held this not to be larceny, as, at the time he received the pigs, he had no intention of appropriating them to his own use, and as he was merely a bailee, and not a servant. (Reg. v. Hey, 2 Car. & K. 983; 14 Jur., part 1, p. 154).

2. False Pretences.]—Where the secretary of an Odd Fellows Society falsely pretended to a member of the society that a sum was due from him to the society for fines, whereby he fraudulently obtained such sum, it was held to be a false pretence within the statute, although the prosecutor had full means of inquiry into the fact. (Reg. v. Woolley, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 465; 19 L. J., M. C., 165). Parke, B., referred with approbation to a note in 2 Russ. Cr. 289, upon the subject.

The obtaining by false pretence a railway ticket is obtaining a chattel of the railway company by such false pretence within the statute; (Reg. v. Boulton, 19 L. J., M. C., 67); and a begging letter, making false representations as to the condition and character of the writer, by means of which money is obtained, is also such a false pretence. (Reg. v. Jones, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 533).

3. Assault, with Intent &c.]—A medical practitioner had sexual connexion with a female patient, of the age of fourteen years, who had for some time been receiving medical treatment from him. The jury having found that she was ignorant of the nature of the defendant's act, and that she made no resistance, solely from a bona fide belief that the defendant was (as he represented) treating her medically, with a view to her cure, he was held to be guilty of an assault; and it seems that he might have been indicted for a rape. (Reg. v. Case, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 489).

4. Poisoning.]—Administering unbroken oculus indicus berries to an infant is administering poison within the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 2, although it is proved that the berries are not poisonous until the exterior or pod is broken, and that, by reason of the weakness of the infant's digestive organs, the berries are innocuous. (Reg. v. Cluderay, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 71; 2 Car. & K. 807).

5. Threatening Letter.]—In Reg. v. Smith, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 92), a letter, stating that a certain evil was about to happen to the prosecutor, which would be prevented by the payment of money to the writer, was held to be a threatening letter within the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, although the writer did not threaten that he himself would do any mischief. It was also decided, that the doctrine that the threat held out must be such as would be likely to intimidate a firm man, and not merely one of a timid disposition, must be taken to refer to the nature of the threat, and not to the nerves of the party to whom it is addressed.

We shall conclude this summary in our next number.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Edward Hugh Jackson, of Wisbech, Cambridgeshire; Robert Hick, of Thirsk, Yorkshire; John Albert Copland, of Chelmsford, Essex; Henry Atkinson, of Manchester; John Cole Copeman, of Loddon, Norfolk; James Cole Copeman, of Loddon, Norfolk; Edward Chilcott, of Tavistock, Devonshire.

RELATIVE LIABILITIES OF DEVISEES AND LEGATEES TO THE PAYMENT OF DEBTS.

In the 47th chapter of his Treatise on Wills, Mr. Jarman states the order of the application of the several funds liable to the payment of debts to be as follows:—

"1st. The general personal estate not expressly or by implication exempted.

"2ndly. Lands expressly devised to pay debts, whether the inheritance or a term carved out of it be limited.

"3rdly. Estates which descend to the heir, whether acquired before or after the making of the will.

"4thly. Devised or bequeathed property, real or personal, which is charged with debts, and then specifically disposed of subject to such charge.

"5thly. General pecuniary legacies pro rata.

"6thly. Specific legacies pro rata.

"7thly. Real estate devised, and, if the rule be subject to the old law, whether in terms general or specific."

In a note to the last paragraph, Mr. Jarman cites Clifton v. Burt, (1 P. Wms. 678), and adds, (vol. 2, p. 547)—

"But in Long v. Short, (2 Vern. 756; S. C., 1 P. Wms. 403), Lord Cowper seems to have made specific legatees and devisees contribute rateably to pay specialty creditors. It is difficult to sustain this doctrine; and the distinction taken in it between cases where the devise is specific, and where it is in general terms, is clearly untenable, the established doctrine of the cases under the old law being, that every devise, however general in terms, was virtually specific. (Forrester v. Lord Leigh, Amb. 173; Scott v. Scott, 1 Eden. 459; Sheeling v. Brown, 5 Ves. 389; Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 306, overruling Gower v. Mead, Pro. Ch. 3). And see particularly Marechaise v. Souffle, (2 My. & C. 685), where Lord Cottenham took a general view of the authorities for the proposition, that pecuniary legatees are not entitled to have the assets marshalled as against a residuary devisee of lands, the principle applicable to specific and residuary devisees being identical." After illustrating this principle Mr. Jarman proceeds—"It remains to be seen whether this doctrine will prevail in reference to wills which are subject to the new law, to which the ground of the doctrine does not apply, as a general or residuary devise is, by the recent enactment, made to extend to all the real estate belonging to a testator at the time of his decease, thereby abolishing all distinction between real and personal estate in this particular."

In Clifton v. Burt, (1 P. Wms. 678), which is the authority cited by Mr. Jarman for his proposition that specific legacies are applicable to the payment of debts before real estate devised in terms either general or specific, the point actually decided was different. There the testator had devised real estate to J. B. by a specific description. There was no charge of debts or legacies on the realty, but there was a charge on copyholds which failed for want of a surrender to the use of the will. Upon the original hearing, Lord Harcourt ordered that, "in case any of the testator's specialty debts had been paid out of the personalty," the creditors by simple contract, and legatees, were to stand in the place of the creditors by specialty, and have satisfaction out of the real estates, so far as the personal estate had been applied in payment of such debts, in equal proportion." On a rehearing, Lord Parker reversed that part of the decree which subjected the devised estate to the legacies, observing, that every devisee of land is as a specific legatee, and shall not be broken in upon or made to contribute towards a pecuniary legacy; and that even a specific legatee is preferred to a pecuniary legatee.

and a specific devisee is more favoured than a specific legatee. Even the dictum in that case, therefore, scarcely warrants the proposition for which it was cited.

In O'Neal v. Mead, (1 P. Wms. 694), however, Sir J. Jekyl, M. R., appears to have considered that the doctrine in Clifton v. Burt was applicable to specific as well as to pecuniary legatees. He there held, that the devisee of a mortgaged freehold estate could not throw the burthen of the debt on a specific legatee of a leasehold, because the testator had himself imposed the burthen on the real estate. But he said this resolution did not in the least interfere with that of Clifton v. Burt, because in the latter there was no mortgage. If his Honor had thought that there was any distinction between specific and pecuniary legatees, he would not have dwelt on the existence of the mortgage.

In Haslewood v. Pope, (3 P. Wms. 322), Lord Talbot, C., is said to have determined several points, of which the fifth was, that "where a man dies indebted by bond, and leaves a personal estate, and devises lands to J. S. in fee, and gives specific legacies, and the creditor by bond comes on the personal estate to be paid his bond, the specific legatees shall not stand in the place of the bond creditor to charge the land devised, because the devisee of the land is as much a specific devisee as the legatee of a specific legacy." But the case actually decided appears to have been this:—A testator devised all his real estates in W. and M. to trustees in fee, in trust, out of the rents, or by sale, to pay his debts, and gave the surplus of his real estates, after payment of his debts, to his daughter, or such other person as should be entitled to his settled estates, and he gave all his personal estate to his daughter, and made her sole executrix. It was held, that the personal estate, being the natural fund for the payment of debts, was primarily applicable in payment of debts. But the decision was principally grounded on the fact, that the same person was devisee of the realty and legatee of the personalty.

In Hanby v. Fisher or Roberts, (Amb. 127; Dick. 104; 2 Coll. 612), also, the point decided was different, being simply, that where a legacy to A. was charged on the real and personal estate, and other legacies were not charged on the realty, the other legatees were entitled to throw A.'s legacy on the realty in exoneration of the personal fund required for payment of their legacies. But some of Lord Hardwicke's dicta in that case appear to agree with the fifth resolution in Haslewood v. Pope. He said, "If land is devised, the legatee shall not stand in the place of creditors, because it appears to be the intent that the devisee should have it, as much as it appears that the legatee should have his legacy. If there is no land, and specific and pecuniary legacies, the latter have no right to stand in place of creditors against the specific, from intention, without any contribution; but if land and money, and legacies and specialty debts, and rest of real and personal to another, the legatee shall affect the land, because given as a residue, and no specific thing given." Upon the suggestion that the land and money should contribute equally, his Lordship said, that was not the intention, and there was no case of any contribution between the devisee of a real estate and legatee of pecuniary things.

The dictum in Haslewood v. Pope is supported by the decisions as to a widow's paraphernalia, in respect of which it has been held, that she has a right to exoneration as against specific legatees; (Sneleom v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 369; Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. Wms. 729; Graves v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 395); but not as against devisees where there is no charge of debts on the realty. (Ridout v. Plymouth, 2 Atk. 104; Probert v. Clifford, Amb. 6; 2 P. Wms. 544, note. See a dictum in Tynt v. Tynt, 2 P. Wms. 544, contra).

between specific legatees of a leasehold, and the devisee of all the testator's freeholds. Lord Cowper decreed that the legatee of the leasehold, and the general devisee, should contribute rateably to the payment of the specialty debts; but as to the debts by simple contract, if there should be not enough over and above to pay them, they must fall upon the leasehold premises only. He said, "The devise of a term for years is as much a specific devise as a devise of lands in fee. Wherefore, each being equally specific devisees, it would in this case be an equal disappointment of the testator's intent to defeat either by subjecting it to the testator's debts." The reporter adds, that the Court allowed, that if the devise had been to A. of all the rest of the testator's lands, this had been a residuary (not specific) devise, and the person taking thereby should not have come in until after all the debts by specialty, or otherwise, had been paid out of his inheritance. The devise, however, in Long v. Short, being of all the testator's lands, seems to have been equivalent to a residuary devise.

In Silk v. Prime, (1 Dick. 384; 1 Bro. C. C. 138; 2 Coll. 509), Sir T. Sewall, M. R., decreed payment of debts, which the personalty and the real estate charged with debts were insufficient to satisfy, out of the personal estate specifically bequeathed and real estate specifically devised. The report does not state that this decree was confined to the specialty debts. There were debts of both kinds, for the decree was appealed from on the point, whether the real estate charged with debts was equitable assets.

In Mirehouse v. Scaine (2 My. & C. 695) pecuniary legatees sought to have satisfaction out of the residuary real estate, either by marshalling the debts on that estate on grounds of general equity, or under the special terms of the will, which they contended charged the legacies on the realty; and Lord Cottenham, C., held, that they were entitled to relief on the construction of the will; but, on the authority of Forrester v. Leigh, (Amb. 171); Scott v. Scott, (1 Eden, 459); and Keele v. Brown, (5 Ves. 359), denied the existence of the general equity claimed in favour of pecuniary legatees. As between specific legatees or specific devisees and residuary devisees, his Lordship appears to have thought that the dicta of Lords Hardwicke and Cowper in Hanby v. Roberts and Long v. Short, and the decision in Spong v. Spong, (3 Bligh, N. S., 84), had settled, that although a residuary devise is, for some purposes, to be considered as specific, it so far differs from a specific gift as to be subject to the payment of debts in exoneration of a specific legatee or devisee.

In Cornwall v. Cornwall, (12 Sim. 298), Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., held, that specific legatees had no right to require specific devisees to contribute to specialty debts, on the ground that the statutes of fraudulent devisees were made for the benefit of creditors, and not of legatees.

In Young v. Hassard, (1 Jo. & Lat. 466), Sir E. Sugden, C., held, that where there was a general charge of annuities on freehold and leasehold lands devised to different persons, the burthen must be borne by the lands rateably, without distinction of tenure, although the chattel estates were given subject to a general charge of debts, and together with the residue of the testatrix's property. His Lordship expressed his dissent from the decision in Cornwall v. Cornwall.

In Tombs v. Rock, (2 Coll. 490), the testator having devised certain real estates by a particular devise, and all other his real estates, to certain uses, it was held that the devisees were bound to contribute rateably with specific legatees to the payment of debts, the personal estate not specifically bequeathed being sufficient for payment of the simple contract debts, but not for payment of the specialty debts. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce grounded his decision on the presumption, that the testator intended all his specific gifts to take effect, so far as could be done consistently with the claims of his creditors, and if not in full, then rateably, and without any distinction between realty and personalty. His Honor took notice that the assets were wholly legal, and that the devise was not to be considered as a residuary devise.

This case was followed in Gervis v. Gervis, (14 Sim. 654), and recognised in Jackson v. Hamilton, (3 Jo. & Lat. 702), (which, however, was a case of contribution between two specific devisees), and Bateman v. Hotchkin, (10 Beav. 434).

From the foregoing statement of the cases, it appears that, though there is considerable conflict of authority, the balance preponderates in favour of the right of a specific legatee to contribution from a specific devisee. Whether this conclusion is reconcilable with the general spirit of the rules of equity as to the administration of assets, (which clearly favour the exoneration of real estate), may, perhaps, be doubted. It is founded wholly on the assumption, that the testator intended that all the objects of his bounty should stand on an equal footing, if possible. But that the Courts will not always act upon such a presumption is clear. Thus it is settled that a pecuniary legatee has no claim to contribution by a specific legatee, although there is no reason for supposing that the testator had not an equally strong desire to benefit the one as the other. If it be said that the personalty not specifically bequeathed is the primary fund for payment both of debts and pecuniary legacies, it may be answered, that the same reason applies to the case between a specific legatee and a devisee. There the personalty is the primary fund; and in each case the contest is between two parties equally intended to be benefited by the testator, but one of whom must be disappointed if the creditors, having a right to resort to two funds, are paid exclusively out of that which, in the absence of any intention expressed or implied, is regarded as the primary fund for the purpose. If the statutes of fraudulent devises had never been passed, the devisee would have been safe from contribution. Can it be said that the accident of the Legislature having given to the creditors a further security than they formerly had, has altered the intentions of testators? The testator finds the law to be, that personalty is the primary fund for payment of debts. The law is certainly unreasonable, but he disposes of his real and personal property without expressing any dissatisfaction with the law, or any intention to control its application. Is it not to be presumed that he was content to leave his assets to be applied in payment of his debts, according to the ordinary rule? It may be admitted, that when a testator has charged his debts on his real estate, he has expressed an intention to exclude the ordinary rule; and in the cases in which such charges have been held to entitle even pecuniary legatees to exoneration out of estates devised, effect has been given to such intentions; and if the principle of Long v. Short is correct, it also should be extended to pecuniary legatees.

With respect to devises residuary in terms, there seems to be sufficient authority for holding that the property included in such devises, even in wills operating under the old law, is to be applied towards payment of debts in exoneration of specific devisees, and even of specific legatees, but not, as it seems, in exoneration of pecuniary legatees—another exception to the principle of the rule in Long v. Short. In cases governed by the recent Statute of Wills, the old doctrine, that a residuary devise is necessarily specific, must be wholly abandoned, and a new field will be opened for applying the principle upon which Long v. Short and Tombs v. Rock were decided. If, as was assumed in those cases, a testator has an intention to benefit his legatees and devisees, irrespectively of the nature of the property bequeathed, and if, as is clear from other cases, a pecuniary legacy, or a specific gift, is to be preferred to a residuary gift, pecuniary legatees should now be allowed to throw the burthen of the debts on the residuary devisee, if the personalty is inadequate.

No case has yet been decided as to the liability of a devisee to contribute to simple contract debts. But it is plain, that since the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, the liability of a devisee is the same in respect of simple contract debts as in respect of specialty debts. That statute has made real estate assets to be administered in equity for the payment of simple contract debts, as well as debts by specialty, and has rendered heirs and devisees liable to the same suits in equity in respect of the one kind of debts as the other, but without prejudice to the priorities of specialty creditors.

LONDON, JULY 6, 1850.

In resuming our summary of cases recently determined by the Court of Criminal Appeal, we next come to those which relate to the form of indictments.

1. Venue.]—The prisoner, in a begging letter, which contained false pretences, and was addressed to the prosecutor, who resided in Middlesex, requested him to put a letter, containing a post-office order for money, in a post-office in Middlesex, to be forwarded to the prisoner's address in Kent. The venue was held to be rightly laid in Middlesex, as the prisoner, by his request, constituted the postmaster in Middlesex his agent to receive the letter there for him; consequently there was a receipt of the money order by the prisoner within the county of Middlesex.

2. Attempt to defraud.]—An indictment, alleging that the prisoner did unlawfully attempt and endeavour fraudulently, falsely, and unlawfully to obtain from A. B. a sum of money, with intent thereby then and there to cheat and defraud the said A. B., was held bad in arrest of judgment. (Reg. v. Marsh, 19 L. J., M. C., 12). The Court appeared to assent to the arguments of counsel, that the act which the defendant was charged with having attempted to commit was not in itself a misdemeanour; that to constitute it a misdemeanour there must be some other ingredient than the obtaining of money with an intent to defraud; and that the obtaining must be by certain means—e. g. false pretences—which should be specified. The indictment was also defective in not stating in whom the property in the money was.

3. Disposal of Bankrupt's Estate.]—It was alleged, in an indictment against a bankrupt, that, at the time of his examination under the fiat, he was possessed of real estate, and feloniously did not discover when he disposed of it, with intent to defraud his creditors. Judgment was arrested for the want of an averment that the prisoner had, in fact, disposed of the said estate.

4. False Pretences.]—An indictment stated that the prisoner unlawfully (not saying "knowingly") did falsely pretend that a certain printed paper was a good and valid promissory-note, and thereby obtained money, with intent to cheat and defraud, and then alleged it was not a good promissory-note. The false pretence was held to be sufficiently alleged; and the Court decided that it was not necessary to set out the terms of the printed paper in the indictment, as nothing turned upon the nature or character of the document. (Reg. v. Coulson and Another, 19 L. J., M. C., 182; and see Reg. v. Bowen, 13 Jur., part 1, p. 1045).

We next come to the decisions relating to evidence; and, first, to the important judgments lately delivered upon the admissibility of a prisoner's statement under the late act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18. It is now decided that the second caution (that the prisoner has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat, to induce him to make any admission &c.) is only necessary where some previous inducement or threat has been held out. (Reg. v. Sansome, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 466; 19 L. J., M. C., 143; Reg. v. Bond, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 399; 19 L. J., M. C., 138). If the statement be returned purporting to be signed by the magistrate, and bearing on the face of it the first caution*, it is admissible without any other evidence. (Ib.) This had been doubted by Alderson, B., in Reg. v. Higson, (2 Car. & K. 769).

The stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 47, s. 17, requires the depositions to be taken in the presence of the accused person. In a late case it appeared that the witnesses had been examined, and minutes taken down and delivered to a clerk in the office of the magistrates' clerk; that the witnesses attended there, and while the depositions were being written out from the minutes, and in the absence of the prisoner, the clerk asked them questions, for the purpose of rendering the depositions more clear, and inserted the answers in the depositions. The depositions so written were afterwards read to the witnesses in the presence of the prisoner, who had full opportunity of cross-examining them before the witnesses signed the depositions. The answers of the witnesses to the clerk were decided to be admissible without the production of the depositions, although, according to the evidence, they would appear upon the depositions. (Reg. v. Christopher, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 203). This appears to have been upon the ground that the paper written by the clerk was not primary evidence; he was a volunteer, and what he took down had no legal character, so as to make it exclusively evidence of what took place on the occasion. (See per Wilde, C.J., Ib.; see also Jeans v. Wheeldon, 2 Moo. & R. 486, and the note to p. 487).

The case of Reg. v. Bond (supra) is a decision illustrative of the extreme strictness required in criminal proof, and decides, that, on an indictment for stealing money, it is not enough for the jury to find that the prisoner has stolen the sum mentioned, but they must be satisfied that he stole some particular one or more of the coins specified in the indictment. Erle, J., dissented from this decision; and it seems desirable that the Legislature should place larceny on the same footing as embezzlement in this respect.

Connected with the practice in criminal cases, it has long been an unsettled question, whether judgment on demurrer in felonies be final, or merely a judgment of respondent ouster. The older authorities tend to shew that it is final, but by some it is said, that, in favorem vite, the prisoner shall plead over to the felony.

In the recent case of Reg. v. Duffy, (4 Cox's C. C. 24), in Ireland, it was held, after an elaborate argument, that the judgment on demurrer in felonies not capital is, that the prisoner plead over; (and see Reg. v. Smith, Id. 42); but in the case of Reg. v. Faiderman and Others, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 377), where the prisoners were indicted for forgery, the presiding judges at the Old Bailey Sessions, which were held after the argument of the case in the Court of Criminal Appeal, decided that the judgment was final.

not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so; but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial."

Reprints.

The House of Lords as a Court of Appeal. London: 1850. [Stevens & Norton.]

This is a reprint of some portions of a work published by Mr. Purton Cooper more than twenty years ago. Its object and contents are best explained by the author's introductory letter to Lord John Russell, in which he says—

"The 'Assumption by the House of Lords of the Appellate Jurisdiction over our Courts of Equity, in the Reign of Charles II., a Violation of the Constitution,' is a chapter of that book. There are other chapters relating to the subject of this pamphlet, but they are too long to form part of it. The translation of five of the 'Lettres sur la Cour de la Chancellerie et quelques Points de la Jurisprudence Anglaise' is appended to the same work. These letters represent the House of Lords as a Court of Appeal in the state in which it was in Lord Eldon's time. Now, it is thought that no material change has since taken place, and it has occurred to some persons zealous for the improvement of our judicial institutions that a reprint of that translation, with the above-mentioned chapter prefixed, may be convenient and useful to those members of the Legislature who are desirous of information upon this important matter; and such being the motive for the reprint, you will, I am sure, pardon the liberty taken in inscribing it to your Lordship."

The text is followed by an appendix, consisting of extracts from all the debates that have taken place in Parliament on the subject of reform in Chancery since 1828, commencing with that which took place on Michael Angelo Taylor's motion in February, 1828. Those who have at heart the separation of the judicial from the political functions of the Chancellor, will find in the pages of this pamphlet much that bears upon the subject, although that is not its specific object.

The following passage we extract as shewing the writer's views:—

"It appears, from the former part of this work, that some objections have been brought forward against any project that may diminish the quantity of the Chancellor's original business, independently of those I have noticed in the text.

"It has been said, that, if such a scheme be carried into effect, the office of Chancellor will soon become political, instead of judicial—the reward of political intrigue and connexion, and not of legal eminence. But it may be asked, at what period of our history has the Chancellor been selected for the abilities he has evinced as a counsel in any court of Westminster Hall, unless they were of a kind to dazzle in a public assembly of a far different description? It is notorious, that nothing less has been thought of than the choice of the man who was most versed in the laws of his country, far less of him who had the most intimate knowledge of that part of our system of jurisprudence known under the name of equity. [It must be recollected that this was written in the beginning of the year 1828.] And, in despite of my prejudices as a lawyer, when I reflect on the preponderating weight and importance of the Chancellor's public duties, which partake more of the political than judicial character, I cannot avoid entertaining an opinion that the Sovereign has been generally well advised in elevating to the giddy height of the Chancellorship an individual whose accomplishments and talents fitted him to shine rather in the senate than at the bar. The taking of the Chancellor from the Court of Chancery, together with the creation of a permanent Court of Appeal in the place of the House of Lords, as suggested in the Chancery Letters, would, in my apprehension, entirely"

'move the insurmountable objection at present existing to the appointment of a common-law advocate to that high office. Everybody knows it is a farce and a mockery for a judge, with even Lord Lyndhurst's quickness and talents, to sit in appeal on the decree of a Grant or a Leach, and reverse the decisions of an Eldon.

"It has also been objected, that, if the Chancellor's original jurisdiction be taken from him, he will be withdrawn from his court, and will no longer have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the individual merits of advocates, and exercising his patronage in the manner most advantageous to the public, by appointing to situations in the law men of the greatest aptitude. One cannot, to be sure, sufficiently admire the self-possession of those who, when they urged this topic, were able to preserve their gravity, as if it were not notorious, that for years past the fitness of the individual to fulfil the duties of the office to which he was appointed was not one of the last things that decided the choice of the Chancellor, or those who have had the control of his patronage. It reflects no great credit on the discernment of those who have held the Great Seal, that the persons who are supposed to have owed their elevation solely to the Chancellor, have been, in general, infinitely more incompetent than those whose advancement is said to have been occasioned by political connexion and influence. [Again it must be recollected, that this was written in the beginning of the year 1828.]

"Some persons think, that when the business of the Court of Chancery shall be subtracted from the Chancellor's other occupations, he will be left without sufficient employment. But, I apprehend, those persons form their judgment upon a very erroneous conception of the multifarious duties attaching themselves to the Keeper of the Great Seal. It should be recollected, that, during the sitting of the House of Lords, the Chancellor's time must be fully occupied with his parliamentary duties. The numerous claims to peerages, claims to vote on elections of peers for Ireland and Scotland, divorce and other private bills, besides the other general business of the session, afford an ample field for his labours. When Parliament does not sit, the ordinary business of the Chancellor, if duly attended to, cannot be less than that of most of the other cabinet ministers. He is required to advise his Majesty on almost all great and important questions, whether they concern our domestic affairs or our relations with foreign powers. Few days can elapse, in a country like this, that it does not become necessary for the Crown to consult its first law officer; to say nothing of the inordinate portion of the Chancellor's time that within the last half century has been consumed by state trials, and the proceedings attending them. The Chancellor has the superintendence of all charitable uses. He is visitor, in right of his Majesty, of all colleges and hospitals of royal foundation. He is the guardian of all lunatics, idiots, and infants. The exercise of his ecclesiastical patronage does, or ought, at times, to engage no small part of his attention. He has jurisdiction to remove coroners for misconduct. He grants and repeals patents and charters, grants writs of supplicavit, &c. In fine, it would require more space than can be allotted to this note merely to enumerate the judicial or ministerial duties of the Chancellor, which are extrinsic to the ordinary business of the Court of Chancery; and all of which, as our books of reports shew, occasionally occupy considerable time. Besides these numerous and discordant duties, (some of which it would be advisable to detach from the Great Seal), it must be recollected that in this country there is no standing commission appointed to superintend our system of jurisprudence, and that that care is the peculiar province of the

'Chancellor, and is alone too extensive for any individual.'

MASTERS' REGULATIONS.

The following resolutions have been come to by the Masters, under the General Orders of the 3rd June:—

1. That all matters which are to be heard by the Masters shall be entered by the Master's clerk in one or more list or lists, in regular order, except such matters, if any, as the Master shall direct to be taken at particular times; and the Master shall proceed to hear and dispose of the matters in such list or lists in the order in which they stand therein; but this is to be subject to the directions contained in the 5th of the above-mentioned Orders.

2. If any proceeding before the Masters, in any cause or matter in any list, fails by reason of the non-attendance of any party when the same shall be called on in its turn, (from whatever cause such non-attendance may arise), and the Master does not think it expedient to proceed ex parte, the cause or matter shall be peremptorily struck out of the list, and shall on no account whatever be heard or entertained by the Master until the same be again set down in the list in regular course, by taking out a fresh warrant for that purpose.

3. That the above-written regulations shall not alter the existing practice by warrants, with respect to matters to be attended before the Master's chief clerk.

These regulations to come into operation from and after the 1st July, 1850.

The Master has directed, that, from and after the 1st July, all matters, for which warrants are taken out for hearing before him, shall be set down, in order of dates of the warrants, in one of two lists, to be called respectively "The General List" and "The Short List."

In the Short List are to be set down all matters which may be properly considered as coming within the description of short matters, such as warrants to consider decrees or orders, unopposed creditors' claims, unopposed settlement of common interrogatories, unopposed proposal for leases, repairs, &c., unopposed appointment of receivers, guardians, new trustees, &c.; also applications under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, s. 13, which are to be placed at the head of the list.

The General List is to contain all matters not proper to be set down in the Short List. The Master will hear the matters set down in the Short List from eleven to twelve on any day excepting Saturday; and from twelve to the end of the sitting, unless he shall otherwise appoint, will hear matters in the General List, according to the order in which they are set down. In case any matter set down in the Short List shall appear to the Master as not properly coming within the description of a short matter, the same will be transferred to the General List, and placed after all matters already set down in such list, unless the Master shall, upon good cause shewn to him, otherwise specially direct.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, Incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The Reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success, the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of nisi prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object, but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman, will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This is a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned.
 Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."

LONDON, JULY 13, 1850.

WE have now to offer some comments upon the New Orders and Regulations affecting the proceedings in Chancery in the Masters' offices—a portion of Chancery procedure even more important to the suitor than that which takes place in the superior court*.

The great alteration effected by the New Orders is the abolition of time-warrants, which unquestionably were the master- nuisance of the Master's office. The old practice is too recently abolished, for it not to be fresh in the recollection of Chancery practitioners, that the waste of time arising out of the system of time-warrants was perfectly frightful. Most cases, whether weighty and intricate or not, were disposed of by warrant for one hour, which would not have been practically a very mischievous mode of proceeding, if the state of business of the Masters' offices had frequently permitted the same matter to be proceeded with on days immediately consecutive. But, in practice, an interval of a week between one warrant and the next, as but a short interval; and latterly, especially since the Masters' offices have been absolutely choked up with cases under the Winding-up Acts, a fortnight, three weeks, or even a month, has been no unusual interval between the successive warrants requisite for the mere hearing of a case. The inevitable consequence has been, that, at the commencement of each warrant, much time has been necessarily consumed in going over ground which had already been travelled over, for the purpose of reinstating the case in the memory of the Judge. In addition to the actual waste of time thus produced, the effect of the system was to impart to proceedings in the Master's office a degree of languor perfectly irresistible by those engaged in them, but operating to make all work done in the Master's office, done at what may be termed half-speed; so that, of every hour nominally devoted to business in the Master's office, it may be fairly, and without exaggeration, said, that one-fourth was consumed in doing a second time what had been done before; and in the remaining three-fourths as much work was done as would have been done in court in twenty-five or thirty minutes. Wherefore, if a Master sat for 250 days in the year, the work of about 120 or 130, at the most, would be got through.

To this evil the fourth of the New Orders is intended to apply a remedy; and carried into effect, as it is, by the new regulations laid down by the Masters, we conceive that it will apply an effectual remedy. There is, no doubt, in the present state of the arrangements, a considerable degree of inconvenience to counsel and solicitors, more particularly to counsel, attending the conduct of a case of any length in the Master's general list. For as a case in the Master's office is now really a cause, which must be argued out and disposed of at once, as the professional men engaged in it cannot leave it, neither can they have it postponed, because their presence may happen to be required in any of the superior courts; and, on the other hand, although, in one of the superior courts, the indulgence of postponement may be occasionally conceded, if the counsel on either side is actually engaged in a cause being heard in another court, unquestionably no such indulgence would be allowed because counsel is absent in an inferior court; and this inconvenience is doubled by the distance between the courts and the Masters' offices, and the practical seclusion of the Masters' offices, into which, though they are, in theory, open to the public, a solicitor's clerk cannot very well run to see whether his master or his counsel is there, as he can and does in any of the superior courts.

This is, however, a mere personal inconvenience to the Profession, for which, we doubt not, some remedy will soon be found. One great step for this and for other beneficial purposes would be, to make the Masters' offices really what they are only in theory, open courts, open as the Vice-Chancellors' Courts are, and as the office of Master Brougham has been during the past week, by the translation of its sittings to the Vice-Chancellor Wigram's Court.

If, however, the Masters' offices are really thrown open, regard should be paid, in their procedure and arrangements, not only to forms and rules of proceeding, but to those minor details, which, apparently trivial, are found to be intimately connected with the respect paid to the judge, and the effective dispatch of judicial business.

It may be thought, for instance, trivial to insist that the Master should sit robed in a raised judgment-seat, instead of being buried in an arm-chair, behind a table, with counsel and solicitors able almost to touch him; or that there should be a distinct seat for counsel, and another for their clients, as in court, and both so placed, with reference to the judge, that, whether the case is conducted by counsel or by solicitors, the advocate, whoever he may be, should address the Master from a reasonable distance. These things may appear matters of mere form; but they are matters of substance, because whatever totally breaks down form, introduces irregularity. In practice much of the time of a Master in Chancery is wasted, by reason of the informal style of proceeding, which is generated by the melée into which counsel, solicitors, clerks, parties, witnesses, and all concerned, are thrown. Men who may have no business to speak, will do so when they are thrown together, as it were, in a party, who would shrink from it if they had to rise in their places at a distance from the judge, and were thus obliged to call his special attention to what they are about to say. Indeed, in the Master's office, it is well known that much time is consumed in either answering those who ought never to have spoken, or in compelling them to be silent.

How the question of fair professional remuneration will be reconciled with the new system of treating cases in the Master's office as causes, is yet to be arranged. There may be some difficulty about it, with reference to both branches of the Profession. A solicitor, for instance, we believe, is only entitled to certain costs on each warrant, which costs are fixed on the notion of a warrant extending over one hour only; so that, if a case takes the whole day, and still more, if it is adjourned, as it must be, unless by express order, without a further warrant, the solicitor attending it will be the recipient of a very trifling remuneration for his labour.

So, if counsel is engaged, the fee to him, which his client will be allowed in costs, will be such as he would be justified in giving on delivering a brief for the Court. (10th Order). What that would be, if a case, expected to take a part of a day, were—whether by reason of the unexpected examination of witnesses, or from other cause—unavoidably protracted over two or three days, (a thing which could only happen in Court in Bankruptcy, but may be of daily occurrence in the Master's office), it is not easy to say.

On these purely practical points, however, we doubt not that the Masters will find, after a short experience, how perfectly to reconcile the interests of the suitor with a fair regard to what is due to the Profession. Altogether, we anticipate from these New Orders great increase of dispatch in the Masters' offices; and, from their combination with the Orders of the 22nd April, the happiest results for the suitors of the court.

What are termed the interests of the Profession may, perhaps, be for a short time injured—that is, in the interval which shall elapse before the public shall find out that the Court of Chancery is a court where justice is really to be had quickly enough to make it worth having. When that period shall have elapsed, we are persuaded that the interests of the Profession, always, in truth, identical with those of the suitor, will be advanced, rather than injured, by the changes which have taken place.

In the leading article in our last Number the following cases were accidentally omitted:—

ON THE ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF TRUSTEES, 10 & 11 VICT. c. 96.

THE Act for the Relief of Trustees, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, amended by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 74, is of such practical importance and constant application, that it is well from time to time to bring together the decisions which have taken place on its provisions.

Before the passing of that act a trustee who had once acted, however complicated and difficult the nature of his trust, could obtain the protection of a Court of equity only through the expensive process of a bill. The act we are now considering enables a trustee to transfer the trust fund into court, into the name of the Accountant-General, on compliance with certain provisions mentioned in the act and in the General Orders of the 10th June, 1848. When the trust fund has been thus paid into court, the parties equitably entitled may apply to the Court, by petition, to establish their rights; and if the Court can safely dispose of the matter on petition, it will do so, to save the expense of a suit; but if there be any question of doubt or difficulty, the Court will not dispose of such question on petition, but will direct a bill to be filed. (In re Bloy's Trust, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 49). The trustees, on payment of the trust fund into court under the act, are relieved from all further responsibility in respect of it, with this exception, that if it shall appear to the Court, on the petition of any of the parties equitably entitled, that the trustees paid the money into court without sufficient reason, they (the trustees) may be charged with the costs thereby incurred.

One of the earliest questions which arose on this act was, out of what fund the costs of petitions to the Court respecting the trust fund, by persons having limited interests in such fund, should be paid.

In Ex parte Fletcher (12 Jur., part 1, p. 619) and Ex parte Peart, (Id. 620), Knight Bruce, V. C., refused to allow the costs of a petition by a tenant for life of the trust fund, to be paid out of the capital of the fund, to the prejudice of those entitled in remainder, without their consent. In neither of those cases, which arose before the General Orders of the 10th June, 1848, were the persons entitled in remainder served with the petition. This fact, however, does not appear to affect the principle of those decisions. (See 12 Jur., part 1, p. 345).

In the case of In re Sharpe's Trustees, (15 Sim. 470), where the petitioners were entitled to certain shares in the trust fund, and prayed payment of such shares, the Vice-Chancellor of England, although the petitioners submitted to bear the costs of the inquiries necessary to establish their claims, was of opinion that the testator's assets ought to bear that expense; that the object of the statute was merely to relieve trustees; and that it was not the intention of the Legislature to deprive the beneficial takers of those costs, which, before the act, would have been borne by the testator's general assets.

The question of costs, however, was reserved, and a reference directed. The Master of the Rolls also, in the case of In re Cawthorne, (18 L. J., Ch., 116), seemed to consider that the Court had jurisdiction to order costs out of the general estate of the testator. In that case a trust fund had been paid into court by the executor of the testator's will. The petitioners were an annuitant, to whom the tenant for life of the trust fund had granted an annuity, and the trustees of such annuitant, to whom the tenant for life had assigned his life interest for better securing the annuity in question. Lord Langdale, having disposed of the other questions raised by the petition, ordered the costs of the trustees of the annuitant, incidental to the petition, to be paid out of the trust fund; and the costs of the executor, incidental to the payment of the trust fund into court, to be paid out of the testator's general estate. Notwithstanding, however, this order for payment of the costs of the executor, it seems, on principle, that it is not competent to the Court to order payment of any costs out of the testator's general estate. By the payment of a particular fund into court under the act, the Court gains no jurisdiction over the general estate of the testator, but only over that particular fund which has been paid in. How, then, is it competent to the Court to order costs to be paid out of a fund over which it has no jurisdiction? Thus, in the case of In re Bartholomew's Will, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 380), the petitioner claimed, as the personal representative of a legatee who had died an infant, a legacy which had been paid into court by the executors of the testator's will. An adverse claim was set up, and the petitioner served both the adverse claimant and the trustees of the fund with the petition. The Vice-Chancellor of England having decided against the adverse claimant, and in favour of the petitioner, the question arose as to the payment of the costs. His Honor held, that, the particular legacy only having been paid into court, he had no jurisdiction to order payment of any of the costs out of the testator's general residuary estate, but that all parties must have their costs out of the fund in court. He considered this a great injustice of the act, as it enabled an executor, by paying money into court, to put parties in a worse position than they would be in if a bill were filed; in which latter case they would get their costs out of the general estate. The Vice-Chancellor, therefore, expressly overruled, and it seems consistently with principle, the opinion which he expressed in the case of In re Sharpe's Trustees, as to payment of costs out of the testator's general estate; and it is submitted that that part of the order of the Master of the Rolls, in Re Cawthorne, which ordered the costs of the executor to be paid out of the testator's general estate, cannot now be supported. It seems also difficult to reconcile that part of the same order which ordered the costs of the annuitant's trustees to be paid out of the fund in court, with the decision of Knight Bruce, V. C., in Ex parte Fletcher and Ex parte Peart. For if it be true that a tenant for life will not be allowed the costs of his petition out of the trust fund, it seems to follow, that no one claiming through the tenant for life, as the annuitant's trustees in the case of In re Cawthorne, can be in a better position. In another case the petitioner had, under the trusts of a marriage settlement, become, by the death of her husband, entitled for life to the dividends of a fund which on her death returned to the husband's representatives. All the trustees of the settlement having died, the executors of the surviving trustee paid the fund into court. The petitioner prayed for payment of the dividends during her life, and that the costs of all parties incidental to the application, and the costs of the executors of the surviving trustee incidental to the payment of the trust fund into court, might be paid out of the principal of such fund. The Vice-Chancellor of England ordered payment of the costs according to the prayer of the petition. This order, so far as relates to the costs of the petitioner, who was only tenant for life of the fund, seems also directly opposed to the decisions of Knight Bruce, V. C., in Ex parte Fletcher and Ex parte Peart, mentioned above. It appears, therefore, to be still an open question, whether or not the Court will order the costs of a petition, presented by a party having a limited interest in the trust fund, to be paid out of the capital of that fund.

We have already remarked, that if a trustee pay trust money into court without sufficient reason, he may be charged, on the petition of those equitably entitled to the fund, with the costs thereby incurred. It is, therefore, of great importance to know under what circumstances a trustee will be justified in paying a trust fund into court. No accurate rule can be laid down on this point, but every case will depend on its own circumstances. The general rule, as laid down by Sir John Leach, and which applies equally to cases since as before the act, is, that a trustee is always entitled to the protection of the Court in the execution of his trust, except where the act required to be done leads to no responsibility, and the motive of the trustee is obviously vexatious. (Curtis v. Chandler, 6 Mad. 123). In similar language it is laid down by Lord Langdale, "that if a trustee undertakes the performance of a trust, he is not entitled, as against the estate he has undertaken to protect, to exercise a mere caprice, and, without any assignable reason, say that he will no longer continue a trustee. On the other hand, if the trustee finds the trust estate involved in intricate and complicated questions, which were not and could not have been in contemplation at the time when the trust was undertaken, he has, in consequence of that change of circumstances, a right to come to the Court to be relieved; and the Court will judge whether the circumstances were such as to make it fair for him to decline acting longer upon his own responsibility." (Groomwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 381).

Having mentioned the general rule, it will be sufficient to refer to the two following cases, which have lately been decided, on this part of the subject. By a settlement it was provided, that if either of the trustees died, or were desirous of being discharged from, or incapable of performing the trusts, the petitioners, during their lives, and afterwards the surviving or continuing trustee, might appoint any other person or persons in their stead. There were originally three trustees, and, one of them having died, the petitioners, in exercise of their power, appointed two new trustees in the room of the three original ones. The two surviving original trustees refused to transfer the fund to the two new trustees, alleging that, under the power in the settlement, three new trustees should have been appointed, and they thereupon paid the money into court. The Vice-Chancellor of England held, that inasmuch as the settlement enabled the petitioners to appoint one or more trustee or trustees in the place of those retiring or dying, the surviving trustees were not justified in paying the money into court, and must bear the costs thereby incurred. (In re Fagg's Trust, 40 L. O. 327).

In another case, however, a fund was, by a marriage settlement, vested in trustees, with an ultimate trust, which, on the death of the wife without having had children, took effect in favour of the husband absolutely. The husband, previously to the death of the wife, had assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. On the death of the wife the trustees of the creditors' deed claimed the fund from the trustees of the settlement, and produced a written admission of the husband that they (the creditors' trustees) were entitled to the fund. The trustees of the settlement, however, alleging that a solicitor claimed a lien on the settlement, and had possession of that deed, and that they had no personal knowledge of the deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, paid the money into court. On a petition by the trustees of the creditors' deed for payment of the money out of court, and to charge the trustees of the settlement with the costs, the Vice-Chancellor thought that the latter trustees were justified in the course they had taken. His Honor said, "It was clear that the trustees (of the settlement) might have been subject to some trouble in ascertaining the claims made upon the fund, and he did not think they were bound to take that trouble. The parties had evidently disagreed upon the subject, and there was no obligation upon them (the trustees of the settlement) to take any responsibility; but they might discharge themselves from the trusts whenever they pleased, by paying the money into court. He therefore thought they were entitled to their costs. (In re Croydon's Trust, 19 L. J., Ch., 173).

Where an executor, after the death of his co-executor, who during her life had alone acted in the executorship, proved the testator's will, and, thinking the other assets sufficient to discharge the unpaid liabilities of the testator, paid a certain fund into court, but after such payment discovered that the other effects were not, as he had thought, sufficient to pay the testator's remaining liabilities, the fund in court was, on his petition, repaid to him, on his undertaking properly to apply it; the parties beneficially entitled consenting to this course. (Ex parte Tournay, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 263).

In the payment of money into court under this act care must be taken that the money be paid to a particular account, and not to the account of the testator's will generally.

Executors paid money into court under the act, to an account headed, "In the Matter of the Will of Samuel Joseph, deceased." On a petition presented for payment out of court, by a party claiming to be beneficially entitled to the fund, Lord Langdale, M. R., refused to make any order, on the ground that the account was too general to enable the Court to act under the statute. He said, "A trustee, who pays money into court to a particular account, will be exonerated as to that sum; but where it is paid to the account of a testator's will generally, it leads to a general administration of the estate. The matter is left too vague and indefinite for the Court to act under this act of Parliament. . . . In proceeding under this act, I conceive an executor must take upon himself the responsibility of saying that the fund belongs to those to whose particular account he desires the fund to be carried, but he declines to take on himself the responsibility of ascertaining the persons or making the payments. It is very important that this distinction should be generally known." His Lordship also said that he could not pay the fund back again, but that he would give leave to the executors to apply for a transfer of the fund from the account, which was too general, to a particular account, but that for such transfer a distinct application must be made. (In re Joseph's Will, 11 Beav. 625).

The costs of such application and transfer would, we presume, fall upon the executors. F. N. B.

LONDON, JULY 20, 1850.

THE state of our law with regard to granting new trials is singularly anomalous. A very slight acquaintance with Nisi Prius business, or a cursory glance at any current number of the Reports, will supply instances where the presiding judge has either incorrectly laid down the law, omitted to draw the attention of the jury to the proper points of the case, or otherwise misdirected them in some material particular. If these miscarriages take place in civil cases, our law subjects all such hasty decisions to the supervision of a full Court. But in criminal cases, subject to some exceptions, the practice is quite otherwise. It would appear, indeed, from a valuable text-book, (2 Russ. on Cr. 725, 726), that the ruling of the judge in a criminal case cannot be reviewed at all after verdict of acquittal, either by motion for a new trial, or on a court of error upon a bill of exceptions; not in error upon a bill of exceptions, because the stat. 13 Edw. 1, c. 31, which gives that remedy, does not, according to the better opinion, apply to criminal cases. But the practice as to new trials rests entirely in the discretion of the Court, and the authorities cited in support of the position, that a new trial is never grantable in a criminal proceeding after verdict of not guilty, not even for the misdirection of the judge, seem to us to be so far from settling the law definitively, that we have thought it may be useful to bring under the notice of our readers some of the older authorities.

It must be first observed, that there is a wide distinction on this subject between cases of felony and cases of misdemeanour; and inasmuch as the law in cases of felony seems perfectly settled, and as an infringement of civil rights is by no means unfrequently dealt with by indictment for a misdemeanour, we propose to confine our observations to that class of cases only.

VOL. XIV.

And we may also here observe, that the authorities do not furnish any ground of reason for such an anomalous state of the law, as that the Crown shall in no case have the liberty of moving for a new trial after verdict of not guilty, although the defendant may, after conviction in cases of misdemeanour. At first sight, this denial to the Crown of the same privilege which is accorded to a prisoner, appears to proceed very naturally from the well-established maxim, that no one shall be put a second time in jeopardy for the same offence; and it must be admitted that this appears satisfactory where the case has been properly submitted to a jury on its merits, whatever verdict they may return. But it is obvious that it is a very insufficient reason for refusing a new trial in those cases where the jury have been misdirected by the judge, or where the verdict of not guilty has proceeded on any other mistake of the Court, in improperly admitting or rejecting important evidence; for if, by reason of a mistake in law on the part of the Court, the defendant escapes a conviction, he can no more be said to have been in jeopardy than a person who has been arraigned and convicted upon an indictment insufficient in law; in which case it is clear, that, when the judgment has been reversed in a court of error, he may be indicted again for the same offence. (Reg. v. Drury, 18 L. J., M. C., 189).

In one of the oldest cases, Res v. Bear, (2 Salk. 646; S. C., 1 Ld. Raym. 414, decided in 9 Will. 3), where a motion was made for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, the Court said, that "anciently a new trial was never granted in criminal cases, where the defendant's have been acquitted. Latterly, where it has been a verdict obtained by fraud or practice, as stealing away witnesses, &c., it has been done, but never yet was done merely upon the reason that the verdict was against evidence."

And even this shews a more liberal spirit towards prosecutors than existed in 15 Car. 2, as it appears, from the report of Rex v. Read, (1 Lev. 9), that a new trial was not then granted after verdict for the defendant, through fraud or practice, unless an information had first been brought, and the parties convicted of such fraud; although Wyndham, J., was strongly of opinion that the new trial should have been at once granted. Then we come to the case of Rex v. Silvertown, (1 Wils. 298), decided in 24 Geo. 2—"an indictment for not repairing a highway; verdict, not guilty; motion made for a new trial, on the ground of the misdirection of the judge. Sed per Curiam.—This is a criminal case, and new trials are never allowed where the defendant is acquitted in a criminal case; so also it is in qui tams, and informations in the nature of quo warrantos."

This case, however, has long ceased to be law, so far as it concerns qui tam actions, and informations in the nature of quo warrantos. With respect to the former, see Wilson v. Rastall (4 T. R. 753) and Calcraft v. Gibbs, (5 T. R. 19), in both which cases a new trial was granted for the misdirection of the judge, after verdict for the defendant, although it is never granted on the ground that the verdict is against evidence. (Brook v. Middleton, 10 East, 268). And Lord Kenyon, C. J., in Calcraft v. Gibbs, said—"Where there is any ground of objection to the law delivered by the judge, on which the verdict has proceeded, if such objection is well founded, it is immaterial what the nature of the cause is. The application for a new trial is a direct appeal to the justice and laws of the country, and cannot be tried and disposed of by any other rule." And a quo warranto information, we find, from Rex v. Francis, (2 T. R. 484), had then, of late years, been considered in the nature of a civil proceeding, and a new trial was accordingly in that case granted, because the verdict for the defendant was against the weight of evidence. So that the only value of Rex v. Silvertown, as an authority, is on the exact point that was there in issue; and with great deference it is submitted, that the same enlightened administration of justice which has rendered one part of the report of that case obsolete, will, at no distant period, modify in a great measure the other part, and at least allow a new trial to be had in all those cases of misdeemeanour where the first verdict for the defendant has proceeded on some mistake of the law.

Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in refusing the rule for a new trial in Rex v. Reynell, (6 East, 315), an indictment for non-repair of a churchyard fence, said, "It is clear, you may indict the defendant again if the fences have continued out of repair since the last indictment; and that is much better than for us, in a case of such minor consequence, to make a precedent of so much importance, which may affect other cases of misdeemeanours." And in Rex v. Mann (4 Mau. & S. 337) the same learned judge said, "The general rule is, that we do not grant a new trial upon an indictment for a misdeemeanour when a verdict has passed for the defendant on the merits." And in Rex v. The Inhabitants of Burton, (5 Mau. & S. 392), he again said, "The Court did not think it proper to break into the general rule, on the suggestion that the prosecution was merely intended to determine a civil right, inasmuch as the right in that case was not bound by the verdict." These were all motions, it should be observed, in which the motion for a new trial was made on the ground that the verdict was against evidence; and the Court, so far from taking their stand on the immutability of the rule that a new trial was never grantable in criminal proceedings, seeks in each case some excuse for their breaking in upon it.

Although the authorities above mentioned apply only to cases where a verdict has passed for the defendant, against the weight of evidence, yet in Rex v. Coke and Jacob, (1 Stark. 516), on counsel suggesting that the Court might grant a new trial for the misdirection of the judge, Lord Ellenborough said, he did not know any such distinction; and no motion appears to have been made to the full Court for a new trial on account of the alleged misdirection; but this, in all probability, arose from counsel, on further consideration, being satisfied that the learned judge's direction to the jury was, in fact, quite right in point of law. And it should further be remarked, that a judge, sitting at Nisi Prius, would not be at all disposed to recognise a novel and subtle distinction never before mooted, especially when that distinction would go far to repeal an antiquated rule of law then supposed to be in existence, and which had as yet been only so modified as to meet the more pressing hardships that had been urged upon the attention of the Court.

No case, indeed, came before the Court in Banc, where the point was raised as to granting a new trial after acquittal for the misdirection of the judge, until Rex v. Sutton, (5 B. & Ad. 52), where a rule was granted to shew cause why the verdict for the defendant should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the grounds, first, of misdirection; and, secondly, the improper rejection of evidence: and, after a learned argument on both sides, the Court again refused to grapple with the point now under discussion, and made a compromise, by suspending the judgment until a new indictment could be preferred, saying that they were not disposed at present to make the precedent of granting a new trial, but thought the precedent in Rex v. Wandsworth (1 B. & Al. 63) might very properly be followed, by suspending the judgment.

Unquestionably it is very unsatisfactory, although by no means an uncommon judicial mode of disposing of an important question, to evade the point as regularly as it is offered for decision; and more unsatisfactory still for a Court to say that at present it is not disposed to make so important a precedent—leaving it to be inferred, that by and by, when the Court is more fully convinced of the hardship and failure of justice which the want of such a precedent may entail, it may listen to an application for that purpose with a more favourable ear.

A strong argument, indeed, in favour of a new trial after verdict of acquittal, in cases of misdeemeanour, is derived from the numerous applications which have from time to time been made for them—from the evasive manner in which these applications have been met—and, finally, from the compromise which the Court has been driven into by suspending the judgment until a fresh indictment is preferred: thus, in effect, giving to the prosecutor almost all that he asks, though at a little greater cost, and perhaps somewhat of delay. The numerous motions, too, for these new trials, afford, we think, some evidence, if not of the opinion of the Profession as to what ought to be the rule in such cases, at all events of the hardship which the present practice works, as well as of the unsettled state of the law on the point.

RECENT CASES ON THE WINDING-UP ACTS, 1848 AND 1849.Companies within the Statutes.

THE Winding-up Amendment Act of 1849 will, doubtless, include many companies, associations, and partnerships not within the act of 1848; and probably the Courts will incline to give the new act in this respect a liberal construction. The question must in future be, what companies or partnerships are not, rather than what are, within these statutes. But it should be remembered that the Court has jurisdiction to determine in each case whether it is "necessary or expedient" to apply the powers of these statutes to the particular company. (Fisher's case, 3 De G. & S. 116). This discretion has been exercised in the case of a solvent company, which was, in form, within the act of 1848, but was not considered to be within its meaning. (Troutbeck's case, 1 Hall & T. 100). And also where a company was substantially at an end, and there were no outstanding liabilities nor assets, and the petitioner had received a "final" dividend, the Court refused to consider it within the act. (Murrell's case, 3 De G. & S. 4).

Petition.

It has been decided that a petition for the winding-up of a provisionally registered railway company may be presented by a scrip-holder who has not signed the subscription contract. (Copper's case, 3 De G. & S. 1). And a member of the managing committee of a similar company, who is not a shareholder, but has paid money on behalf of the company to its creditors, may likewise petition. (Cooke's case, Id. 148). But a company will not be charged with the costs of more than one petition under the act. (Turner's case, Id.) The Court will order a petitioner out of the jurisdiction to give security for costs. (Latta's case, Id. 186).

Contributories.

Many cases are reported in which, on various grounds, contributories have resisted their liability. The following summary of them will be found to include all the recent decisions on this important question:—Fraudulent misrepresentations in the prospectus or the advertisements of a company, to induce parties to take shares, are not a ground for a shareholder to repudiate his liability, unless he can shew that he was the only person deceived by them; for as between himself and other shareholders similarly imposed upon, there is clearly a right of contribution. This was decided in the case of one Parbury, who took shares in a provisionally registered company on the faith of its prospectus, which stated that the capital of the company was to be 3,000,000*l.*, in 120,000 shares of 25*l.* each, the deposit on which, to be immediately payable, was 1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* per share; whereas, in fact, not more than 60,000 shares were ever allotted, and only on 23,495 of these were deposits paid. (Parbury's case, re The Direct London and Exeter Railway Company, 3 De G. & S. 43). And, again, where the conditions of the contract specified on the back of the scrip certificates were not fulfilled by the company, and the contributory had been induced to take shares on these conditions, and by the misrepresentation of a clerk of the company as to the provisions of the company's future deed, the contributory was not exonerated. (Sharpus's case, re The Universal Salvage Company, Id. 49). So, where a shareholder in the same company, conceiving that the company had not fulfilled their part of the contract, voluntarily incurred a forfeiture of his share under one of the conditions, he was, nevertheless, liable. (The Earl of Mansfield's case, Id. 58). It seems to have been decided in the last two cases, that if a person agrees in writing to take shares upon certain conditions in a company provisionally registered, and the same company afterwards becomes completely registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, the shareholder is thereupon converted into an absolute partner, free from the conditions.

Authority of Directors &c. to bind Company.

It should be observed, that the directors of a company cannot, any more than a clerk, be its agents to induce a party to join it by fraudulent misrepresentations. In such a case, therefore, the remedy of the deluded shareholder, if he has any, must be against the individual who deceived him. (Dodgson's case, 3 De G. & S. 85). With respect to forfeiture, though it seems that voluntary forfeiture, not accepted by the directors, as in the case above, will not absolve a contributory from liability, yet where such forfeiture is formally declared by the directors, and submitted to by the shareholder, the effect is to discharge him from all liability whatever, whether past, present, or future. (Beresford's case, re Kollman's Railway Locomotive and Carriage Improvement Company, Id. 175). So, the holder of preference shares cannot successfully contend that he is not a contributory, because the issue of such shares was illegal. (Hitchcock's case, re The Vale of Neath and South Wales Brewery Company, Id. 92). But where new shares, illegally issued, were on that ground called in by the company's acting manager and director, the holder of them was thereby discharged from his liability. (Pim's case, re The St. George's Steam-packet Company, Id. 18).

A contributory does not relieve himself from any part of his liability by a sale of his shares to the directors of the company, when they have no authority to purchase. As to what gives such authority, it is evident, when the company is a partnership, the directors cannot make such a purchase without the consent of all the partners; and if the power is not given them by the company's deed of settlement, which would bind all the partners, an actual consent of every partner must be shewn.

In Morgan's case a general meeting was called, according to the provisions of the company's deed, in all respects, except that notice of a resolution then passed, empowering the directors to purchase shares, was not previously given to the proprietors, and the deed required notice to be so given of the "specific object or objects" of the meeting. The Lord Chancellor, reversing the decision of Knight Bruce, V. C., held, that such a meeting did not sufficiently represent the shareholders to bind them, by acquiescence, to a purchase of shares under the resolution, unless it could be shewn that, in fact, every shareholder was actually present.

However, if, in that case, a shareholder actually present, and who was privy and assented to the purchase, had called upon a vendor of shares to the company, under the authority of the resolution, for contribution to a liability incurred by the company subsequently to such sale, the Lord Chancellor intimated that the vendor of shares would have some equity against the applying shareholder, to resist such an application from him individually. (Re The Vale of Neath and South Wales Brewery Company, ex parte Morgan, 1 Mac. & G. 225).

Where shares in the same company were sold to a director, apparently for himself, but in reality for the company, the shareholder selling, being proved cognisant of the fact, was not discharged from his liability. (Richmond's Executor's case, 3 De G. & S. 96).

But a shareholder in the same company who had sold to a director, believing him to be a bona fide purchaser for his own benefit, was exonerated as from the time of the sale. (Hollway's case, 1 De G. & S. 777).

Of course, where the purchase by the directors is authorised by the company's deed, the vendor is discharged from liability from the time of the sale. (White's case, 3 De G. & S. 157).

But though the directors have no power to apply the funds of the company to the purchase of shares, they may bind the company, by an agreement with a shareholder, that he shall not be liable to any of the losses of the company. (Woodfall's case, re The Universal Salvage Company, Id. 63).

Several cases have occurred in which parties have become shareholders or partners, with an understanding that they were not to be liable to the losses of the company or partnership. It seems that such an arrangement will be valid, if entered into without any fraudulent purpose on the part of the shareholder, and with persons competent to bind the company, but not otherwise.

In one of these cases the manager of a joint-stock banking company induced a friend to allow shares to be placed in his name, and to sign the company's deed as a personal favour, promising on behalf of the company to indemnify him against all loss, and the shares were to remain the company's property. Subsequently they were retransferred to the company. The holder never paid or received anything in respect of the shares, nor was his name included in any account or return under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, as a member of the company, nor registered as such at the Stamp-office; and the arrangement with him was approved by the directors. Nevertheless, he was held to be a contributory, the Vice-Chancellor looking upon the whole transaction as a device to induce other parties to take shares, by representing the individual whose interest was in question as a bona fide shareholder. (Davidson's case, re The St. Marylebone Banking Company, Id. 21).

In another case the proprietor of a newspaper was a creditor of a company, and received shares therein, as payment of the company's debt to him. It was distinctly understood between him and the company's secretary and chairman, that he was not to incur any liability, nor to be called on to sign the deed. He received the scrip, and subsequently sold it at a small premium. The Vice-Chancellor said that the shareholder had contracted with those who might be considered with propriety as representing the whole company, and that he was under no liability. (Woodfall's case, re The Universal Salvage Company, Id. 63).

In another case a person consented to be named a provisional committeeman, but never attended any meetings, or acted in any way. Twenty-five shares were allotted to him as a qualification, but he never accepted them, nor paid any deposit. The Vice-Chancellor of England decided that he was a contributory. (Cottle's case, re The Wolverhampton, Chester, and Birkenhead Junction Railway Company, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 453*).

The sale by a shareholder of his shares to a third party transfers, prima facie, the liability, after the time of the sale, to the purchaser, but does not affect the liability of the original shareholder up to that time, unless by express agreement. Thus, the executors of a shareholder sold his shares to S., who paid the full purchase-money, and signed a written contract for the purchase. Five of the purchased shares were assigned to the purchaser by deed, and the whole were transferred to him in the company's books, and the company formally accepted the purchaser as a shareholder. He was placed on the list as a contributory from the time of the purchase, his liability being limited to that period by a clause in the company's deed. (Sanderson's case, re The North of England Banking Company, 3 De G. & S. 68).

* This case was reversed by the Lords Commissioners on the 15th instant. (See also Beasley's case, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 587; Hole's case, Id. 588).

However, the covenants in the deed, by which the five shares are assigned, may be of such a nature as to throw the entire liability, both past and present, in respect of all the shares sold, upon the purchaser; for the whole contract of sale is, in such a case, governed by the terms of the deed of transfer of the five shares. (Dodgson's case, re The North of England Banking Company, Id. 85).

Brokers who held shares as securities for the debts of different shareholders, with the cognisance of the directors, and who exchanged these shares, when called in, for others, in their own names, were placed on the list of contributories as absolute owners. (Price and Brown's case, re The Patent Elastic Pavement and Kamptulicon Company, Id. 146).

Where a man marries a woman who is a contributory, it seems the liability becomes joint, and both should be named contributories, so that it may survive in case of the death of either of them. (Burkiss's case, re The North of England Joint-stock Banking Company, Id. 18; Sadler's case, Id. 36).

So, two trustees, into whose names shares have been transferred, are only liable jointly. (Pim's case, Id. 11).

Shares, it seems, may almost be thrust upon a person, so as to make him a contributory; at least, one who submits to become a shareholder, without considering or being aware of his possible liability to loss, will not on that ground alone be excluded.

In Macguire's case, a father transferred to his son, without his knowledge and without consideration, two shares in a steam-packet company, to enable the son to take advantage of a rule which gave to shareholders a free passage in the company's vessels. The passage-ticket used by the son named him a proprietor, and also the counterfoil thereof, which he signed for each voyage; but he never paid or received anything in respect of the two shares. He was held to be a proprietor, partner, and contributory. (Re The St. George's Steam-packet Company, Id. 31).

In a similar case, where the transferee was aware of the transfer, but was a minor, and on coming of age repudiated the transaction, he was of course not liable. (Litchfield's case, Id. 141).

Trustees, into whose names shares have been transferred without their knowledge, are liable in that character, if they accept the trust. (Pim's case, Id. 11).

But not a trustee to whom there was no actual transfer. (Hall's case, 1 Mac. & G. 307).

A general disregard of the company's deed may amount to a waiver of its provisions as between the shareholders. (White's case, 3 De G. & S. 157).

Liability to contribute, with other shareholders, to the losses of a company, is independent of liability to the company's creditors. (Dodgson's case, Id. 90).

Monies borrowed from a provisionally registered railway company by its sharebrokers, who were also shareholders, and had signed the company's deed, to enable them to complete a large purchase of shares then in the market, and for which monies they afterwards deposited these shares and some of their original shares as a security, were not due from them as members or contributories of the company, so as to authorise a summary order for them to repay, under sect. 66 of the act of 1848. (Cow's case, Id. 180). This decision was affirmed by Lord Truro on the 18th instant.
